NEGRO AMERICANS—AN ASSET OR A LIABILITY

IT is most undesirable, if not unthinkable, that a race of people, one-tenth of the entire population, should continue to live in the United States, without adequate opportunity to develop the intellectual and spiritual natures and talents with which God has endowed them and continually chafing under the limitations imposed upon them. The Negroes in America are descendants of men and women who were brought to these shores without their consent. They came from a land in which God had placed them and were forced from a life of freedom into one of bondage. It is incumbent upon the white Americans to-day to undo, so far as possible, the injustice of yesterday.

Negro Americans are not only fellow human beings, with spirits created in God's image, but they are fellow citizens by birthright. They have right to life, liberty, education, and the pursuit of those things on which their welfare depends. Most white Americans come into contact with Negro Americans but few appreciate the injustices from which they suffer, the handicaps under which they labor or their viewpoint on social, industrial and political questions. Many white people know the Negro cook or furnace man but not the Negro lawyer, banker or physician. They have heard caricatures of the picturesque but ignorant Negro preacher but are entirely unacquainted with highly educated and refined Christian preachers and teachers. The Negro is in American life to stay and unless he is educated and given an opportunity to follow his highest and best ambitions as a man he will be a sore in the body politic and a menace to society. Given justice and opportunity Negro Americans may be made a valuable asset not only in economic life but in every department of civil and religious activity.

The pressing importance of this subject makes it especially fitting that the Home Missions study topic for the coming year (1922-1923) should deal with the Negro in America. It is also most appropriate that the principal study book should be written by an educated, refined and Christian Negro American, Dr. George E. Haynes, the Secretary of the Commission on the Church and Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches. He was until recently director of the Bureau of Negro Economics in the U. S. Department of Labor and previously was Professor of Sociology and Economics at Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee. Dr. Haynes has written a book entitled "The Trend of the Races" which is a study of the relation between the white and Negro races, their maladjustment, and the remedy. Other study books on the same subject are "In the Vanguard of a Race" (biographical sketches) by Mrs. L. H. Hammond; "Race Grit," by Coe Hayne of the Baptist Home Mission Society and "The Magic Box," six other stories for boys and girls, by Anita B. Ferris. There are also leaders' handbooks, Negro primary picture stories, edited by Mrs. E. C. Cronk, and a picture sheet.

In view of the interest in this subject and the fact that thousands of men and women will be studying it during the summer and the following months, the REVIEW has devoted this number largely to a further presentation from various points of view. The authors include both white and Negro writers, all of whom are contributing in some special way to the solution of the problem of the Negro in American life. Other articles, which will appear later in the year, include:

- "Tuskegee's Contribution to American Life" by Principal R. R. Moton.
- "The Need for Trained Negro Leaders," by Dr. James H. Dillard, Secretary of the Slater and Jeanes Funds.
- "What the Commission on Interracial Cooperation Has Accomplished," by R. B. Eleazer, editor of the Missionary Voice.
- "Negro Contributions to American Life" by R. W. Roundy, Associate Secretary of the Home Missions Council.
- "Young Men's and Young Women's Association Work for Negroes" by C. H. Tobias, Secretary of the International Y. M. C. A.
- "Best Methods in the Study of the Negro Problem in America" by Mrs. E. C. Cronk.

The purpose of these discussions is not to exalt the Negro, to discount his limitations, or to advocate closer social fellowship between the races, but it is first to bring out the facts, second to show their relationship to present day problems, and third to show how Negroes can be encouraged to realize their legitimate ambitions and to fill most satisfactorily the place in American life for which God intends them.

TURMOIL IN CHINA—POLITICAL AND RELIGIOUS

POLITICALLY and religiously China is disrupted. The Peking Government forces under General Wu have routed the Manchurian General Chang who had the support of Sun Yat Sen, President of the Southern Provinces. General Wu's forces were ably supported by the Christian General Feng and his Bible studying troops.

Among the student classes there has also been a conflict on religious grounds. Early in April a manifesto was given wide publicity in China on the eve of the meeting of the World Christian Student Federation in Peking. It was anti-Christian in character and was probably planned by a small group, possibly inspired by the socialistic trend which is spreading rapidly through Eastern Asia from Russia and the West. It certainly shows evidence of familiarity with this radical type of thought but probably its animus is primarily not from social so much as from intellectual unrest.

Dr. J. Leighton Stuart of Peking University, writes: "There is among students in China to-day a very wide spread 'New Thought Tide' which is impatient of every form of traditional authority or inherited custom. It is strongly atheistic and materialistic in its philosophical assumptions, and regards all religion as superstitious and as a barrier to free investigation or to human progress. It is significant that its particular dislike is toward Christianity which is often treated in effect as equivalent to religion, although never so stated expressly. This is due in part at least to the virile activity and growing power of the Christian movement. The fact that it is so predominantly foreign still, at a time when nationalism is intensifying, aggravates this hostile attitude on the part of many Chinese.

"In a certain sense this outbreak is to be welcomed. It has been latent and is now known to exist. The promoters are perhaps few but the sympathizers numerous. It may challenge Christian students as nothing else would to an effective and fearless witnessing to their faith. For missionaries and all Western friends of Chinese students it accentuates the call of insight and sympathy for these sorely perplexed youths in the midst of a ferment of Western knowledge and rationalism upon an ancient culture."

WOMAN'S PROGRESS IN CHINA

THE women of China include all classes and conditions—the poor, illiterate woman working hard in her home; the wealthy, illiterate woman spending her time on dress, gambling and theatre-going; women who do heavy work in the fields or road-making, or carrying; women at work in industry (Shanghai alone employs over 20,000 women in factories). While only 15 per cent read, they are usually the dominant influence in the home. Legal rights she has few, but social rights she does possess, and a woman of character and strong will and ready tongue makes her wants known in no uncertain way.

Education for women in China is not very old for the oldest mission school was opened about 40 years ago and government schools and most private schools since 1905. A girl with bound feet cannot enter a school as a student, a decision which is doing much to end that crippling custom. Since girls can bring in money to the family exchequer, they are able to insist on more consideration in the choice of husbands. Some obtain promises from their parents that they shall not be betrothed until their education is finished. The uneducated woman has also a new economic value, she can be a wage earner in a factory. In China single women are just beginning to play their part in working out the new ideals. Some remain unmarried from choice, and are giving great service in teaching, medicine, and social service of various kinds. Others marry later thus making available for public service several years of life which formerly were spent in seclusion behind the high wall of the mother-in-law's home.

Canton boasts a guild of women road-makers, who swear celibacy as a condition of entrance! The decision of educated girls to have some say in the choice of a husband is having an excellent reflex action on the young men who are in search of wives!

Recently more women of a superior type are taking up nursing; but doctors and medical students are not plentiful. Social conventions make it difficult for a woman doctor to practise, and not every woman has pioneering courage. A new demand for physical directors has led to the opening by the Y. W. C. A. of a splendidly equipped School of Physical Education, where High School graduates take a two years' course in hygiene, sanitation, pedagogy, and all kinds of physical work. The majority of these students come from the government normal schools, which have been centers of anti-Christian, anti-foreign feeling. The graduates, going back usually as Christians, are already a factor in changing the idea of many hundreds of to-be teachers about Christianity.

Until recent years higher education for women was only to be obtained out of China but now two good colleges for women are well established, doing their work in English, and maintaining a high standard. Students from either the Peking or Nanking colleges for women are in great demand as leaders for student conferences, both Christian and non-Christian. They are nearer in thought to their own people, and often more earnest in outlook, than the student just returned from abroad. Members of the latter group, it may be said, are making a splendid effort to find their place for service.

Educated Christian women married to men of influence have an important share in China's future. Many of them are prominent in public affairs, and all of them make a contribution through their homes. A cultured, happy, cooperative Christian household is of untold value in setting a standard of home life.

There is a movement for co-education amongst women students since they claim that they can never obtain respect from their men till they meet them on common ground. Two or three of the colleges are experimenting with the matter, and there is talk of the Government converting one of its big normal schools into a co-educational institution.

An interesting and significant feature of the new movement in China is the absence of sex discrimination. In the modern patriotic student movement girls have played a leading part. Clever girls are in great demand as wives, and a brilliant student is sure of plentiful matrimonial propositions. The educated man wants a wife to share his interests, not simply to run his house. Some independent churches have women on the boards of management; one in Shanghai has a woman treasurer and a woman as superintendent of the Sunday-school, not because there are no men available, but because the women are the best persons for the work.

Amongst all classes of students the desire for service is remarkable. Jesus Christ, presented as the great servant, calling His followers to devotion and sacrifice for the sake of others, appeals in China. The movement called the Tide of New Thought is questioning sharply the place of religion in modern thought, but the figure of Christ has a compulsion all its own; it is wonderful sometimes to see the mind of an absolute non-Christian open to the truth of the gospel of love when presented in a comprehensible way.

Chinese women are developing. The great, unwieldy, unmoving conservative mass is gradually being changed but it is a long, hard process that requires the power of God and the Spirit of Christ.

RESUSCITATING THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT

A CONFERENCE of Christian laymen met at the Hotel LaSalle in Chicago, May third and fourth, to consider the advisability of resuscitating the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, The Laymen's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada has suspended its activities, and

WHEREAS, No conditions exist at present which would put the activities of a Laymen's Movement in conflict with other activities, and

WHEREAS, There is a feeling among many leaders that there is an increasing need for unofficial and friendly association in the missionary work of the Church affording an opportunity for the cultivation of a spiritual cooperation among Christian forces, particularly in respect to the development of missionary vision and purpose; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we who are in conference believe that steps should now be taken to organize the Laymen's Missionary Movement of North America to be commonly known as the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The former organization to stimulate and direct the missionary interest in the men of the churches accomplished much during its thirteen years of activity, until it was absorbed by the Inter-church World Movement. It was organized in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, on November 15, 1906. Gradually, under the direction of John B. Sleeman, J. Campbell White, Wm. B. Millar and others, it grew to large proportions with many secretaries, a monthly periodical, and great conventions. There is no doubt that through this movement many good things were accomplished:

1. Multitudes of laymen were brought to see more clearly the greatness and importance of the missionary task and to realize their own responsibility to share in the work.

2. Missionary literature, appealing to laymen, was produced—including books, tracts and the monthly magazine, "Men and Missions."

3. Study classes for men were formed in churches where thousands became better informed as to world-wide missions.

4. Stewardship was taught and enlarged giving to missions resulted. Business men responded to the challenge of Student Volunteers to furnish the means to send them out.

5. The power of prayer was emphasized and illustrated.

6. Many individual laymen were enlisted and developed as leaders in the great missionary cause. Many laymen visited mission fields and on their return home reported their observations in a way to convince others of the need and the great work of Christian missions.

7. Conventions were held in many cities, (seventy-five in one campaign), and large numbers of men were enlisted in the enterprise.

8. Men were brought into more active Christian service in their own denominations and home churches.

9. Denominational laymen's movements were formed and more intensively cultivated their distinctive fields.

10. Christian unity and interdenominational cooperation were promoted so that Christ and His cause were magnified.

The achievements of the Movement were many and remarkable. It ceased to function when the Interchurch World Movement began. At the recent meeting in Chicago a General Committee of forty-one laymen was appointed with power to add to their number and a temporary Executive Committee of eight (mostly from Illinois) was appointed to serve until the General Committee appoint a permanent Executive Committee. As the work of the Movement develops it is proposed to create district, state and local self-governing committees. A general Advisory Committee is to be composed of Missionary Board secretaries and ministers, to counsel with the General Committee in making plans and programs. The expenses of the Movement are to be secured from individuals whose gifts to the cause are understood not to interfere with their obligations to their respective churches.

While recognizing the evident leading of God in the organization of the original Laymen's Missionary Movement, the notable achievements of the past, and while deeply sympathizing with the purpose still further to awaken and enlist Christian men in the missionary enterprise, there is some doubt as to whether the time has yet arrived for reviving the Movement in its interdenominational character.

1. The Movement accomplished its great purpose, that of proving to Christian business men the importance of missionary work and their responsibility for supporting it.

2. The leading denominations have already established their own laymen's movements which can effectively carry on the work in their churches. These organizations can cooperate to hold union meetings for men where desirable.

3. The interdenominational values and activities of the Movement may be preserved and carried on, including the publication of literature and the conduct of conventions, by existing interdenominational missionary organizations.

4. While the funds for the Movement were not drawn directly from denominational mission treasuries, but came from individual contributions, nevertheless considerable overhead expense (at least $60,000 a year) was involved and one more organization added to the multitude that now overburden busy men.

What is needed to-day is not more machinery but more spiritual life; not more activity but more coordination in the members of Christ's body and more complete subordination to Him as the Head of the Church.

RELIGIOUS REVIVAL IN RUSSIA

REPORTS coming from many sources indicate that the essentially religious nature of the Russian people is reasserting itself, and that a genuine religious revival is taking place in both Russia and Siberia. A dispatch from Copenhagen describes the gathering of more than 150,000 people in Red Square, Moscow, under the walls of the Kremlin for devotional exercises. From the windows of his office in the Kremlin, Lenine looked on and watched the patriarch bless the people. There were many officers and privates from the red army in the throng. Another cablegram, to the Chicago Herald and Examiner reads: "Cumulative reports from various parts of Russia tell of a rapidly growing religious reaction from the atheistic and irreligious Bolshevik doctrines. . . . Leaders of the communist parties are complaining that large numbers are being swept away by this reborn religious wave. The people are returning to the churches, are again being married in the churches and having their children baptized, all of which was done away with by the communists as 'unnecessary' and superstition. The Bolshevik press is thundering loudly at the Church, but the position of the Church has been so strengthened by the new religious movement that the communists are chary about resorting to rigorous measures.”

Baptist workers at various points in Russia and Siberia report thousands of baptisms and such spiritual hunger on the part of the people that in some places priests of the Orthodox Church have offered their churches for the evangelical services. Everywhere the scarcity of workers and of Christian literature is deplored.

Too much stress cannot be laid on the importance of giving the Bible to the Russian people and of teaching them to understand its message of life. Among the various agencies at work with this end in view, the principal one is the British and Foreign Bible Society, which had, up to the war and for sometime after, a staff of workers in Russia with two general Agencies, one with headquarters in Petrograd, and the other in Siberia at Ekaterinburg. These agencies circulated 482,221 copies of the Scriptures in 1912. The American Bible Society has offered to give dollar for dollar to every mission that wishes to supply Bibles to Russians. It is as important to feed Russia spiritually as it is to give the people bread for their starving bodies.

INFLUENCES AT WORK IN INDIA

MANY forces are working to reshape Indian thought and destiny. Some of these forces are destructive and disintegrating, but most of them are constructive. They include modern industrial and commercial ideas and methods, political aspirations due to wider contacts, educational progress through science and history, moral reforms instituted by the British Government, and religious influences introduced by Christian missionaries.

One of the most powerful of these modern influences is the new vision of life brought by Indians who have returned home from Europe or South Africa. They have new ideas of justice, of opportunity, and of methods and ideals of life. A writer in The Harvest Field (Madras) says:

“Members of the Borah community had been abroad in large numbers, and had grown enormously rich. It was not hard to recognize the villages in which the returned merchants had settled down, for, in contrast to the low-built Hindu village hidden behind its sheltering circle of trees, these Mohammedan townships rose white and glittering and gaudy above the level plain.

“Among the Hindus, men of almost every class had been abroad, but the majority of those whom we met were farmers, and in Africa had plied the trade of vegetable sellers. The village barber, however, back again to his familiar seat on the clay plinth, said that he too had been there, and had had a shop—£5 a month he had paid for it. ‘There’s no caste there. Caste stops the minute we get on board the boat at Bombay. I won’t eat with a Dherd, but except for that, we come and go together as if there was no such thing as caste.’

“The second thing to which they testified was to the purity of Christian justice. Life abroad changed the whole outlook of these men, and they in turn brought a new atmosphere into the life of the village.

"The second great influence at work in the Indian villages is that of reformed Hindu sects, especially the Kabirites and the Arya Samajists. Both of these sects testify to truths Christians are endeavoring to teach—the acknowledgement of one God, and the denial of caste."

India is slowly awakening, but thus far much of the new life is shown in political agitation for self-government, without any evidence of an earnest purpose to uproot the evils of caste, child marriage, temple prostitution and similar hoary customs that prevent India from taking her place among progressive nations. Is it any wonder that Mr. Gandhi has assured his countrymen that they will not be worthy of Home Rule so long as such things continue?

In India the villages are so numerous that if Jesus Christ had begun to preach in them 1900 years ago and had visited in one each day, He would not yet have completed the round. This makes the problem of evangelization one of giving the Gospel to the people of these villages as speedily and as effectively as possible. The masses are not reached through the Brahmans or the student classes, but through the villages and their headmen.

The Report of the Commission on Village Education in India, that visited the country in 1920, has been the basis for discussion in British and American Missionary Societies. At a conference held in New York recently the following conclusions were reached:

1. It is the aim of Christian missions to give the Gospel of Christ to the villages, to uplift the people spiritually, socially and intellectually; and to train leaders who will be fitted to evangelize their own people.

2. For this purpose it is important to develop the village schools and village churches as Christian community centers of life and activity.

3. Vocational training, under missionary supervision, is of valuable assistance in fitting the Indian Christians for life and service in their community.

4. Attention to the physical welfare of the people is greatly needed, since their life is, as a rule, in such a low scale. The school children need medical inspection, and the parents instruction in hygiene and sanitation, as well as in Christian truth.

5. Well trained elementary teachers are especially required, and experiments should be made in developing some well-equipped elementary schools, fitted to develop Christian character and practical service.

6. Missionary supervisors of this Christian education should be appointed to serve in India to oversee the work and help the teachers. The main teaching work, however, must be done by Christian Indians.

7. Wherever the present system of missionary education is not meeting the needs of the people, the work should be fearlessly reconstructed, abandoning schools that are not needed and concentrating effort where it is most important.

While these are valuable suggestions looking toward the more speedy and effective evangelization of the people of India; and while missionaries must prepare the Christians for the highest type of service in their communities, we must never lose sight of the prime importance of insisting that the teachers shall aim first of all at the regeneration of the individuals, and shall be fitted for spiritual work and leadership.

The Negro in America Yesterday and To-day

Monroe N. Work

A Half Century of Progress

The Negro in America in 1866 and in 1922

BY MONROE N. WORK, TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA

Director of Department of Records and Research, Tuskegee Institute and Editor of the "Negro Year Book"

TO a very large extent January 1, 1866 was the beginning of the opportunity for the Negro in every part of the nation to make progress. Thirteen days before this time—that is, on December 18, 1865, the Thirteenth Amendment declaring slavery abolished in every part of the country was adopted. In 1866 there were five million Negroes in the United States; there are now eleven million. This is a population three million greater than that of Belgium; it is greater than that of Holland and Switzerland combined or of Norway, Sweden and Denmark combined.

The progress which the Negroes have made since their emancipation is remarkable and worthy of consideration. It is for convenience summarized in the following table under three heads, economic, educational and religious.

Some Lines of Progress	1866	1922	Gain in Fifty-six Years
ECONOMIC PROGRESS—
Homes Owned,	12,000	650,000	638,000
Farms Operated,	20,000	1,000,000	980,000
Businesses Conducted,	2,100	60,000	57,900
Wealth Accumulated,	$20,000,000	$1,500,000,000	$1,480,000,000
EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS—
Per Cent Literate,	10	80	70
Colleges and Normal Schools,	15	500	485
Students in Public Schools,	100,000	2,000,000	1,900,000
Teachers in all Schools,	600	44,000	43,400
Property for Higher Education,	$60,000	$30,000,000	$29,940,000
Annual Expenditures for Education, ...	$700,000	$28,000,000	$27,300,000
Raised by Negroes,	80,000	2,000,000	1,920,000
RELIGIOUS PROGRESS—
Number of Churches,	700	45,000	44,300
Number of Communicants,	600,000	4,800,000	4,200,000
Number of Sunday Schools,	1,000	46,000	45,000
Sunday School Pupils,	50,000	2,250,000	2,200,000
Value of Church Property,	$1,500,000	$90,000,000	$88,500,000

Moral Progress.—Although there is no concrete way of measuring moral progress, the question can well be raised whether any people can make substantial and continued development unless this development has a moral foundation. If this is true, then it can be said that although not admitting of actual demonstration, the Negro has nevertheless made moral progress. It can also be said that this moral progress has expressed itself concretely in the economic, educational and religious improvement of the race, particularly in the improvement in home life. One of the most significant features in the progress of the Negroes is that starting with no well defined family life they have established in a half century over two million homes.

Home Owning.—It is estimated that the Negroes started in 1866 with about twelve thousand homes owned. It was found in 1890 when the first census of proprietorship of homes was taken, that the Negroes had acquired ownership of 264,288 homes. The number of these homes on farms was 120,738. The number of city homes owned was 143,550. The Census of 1910 recorded that the Negroes owned 506,590 homes. Of these 221,535 were farm homes and 285,055 were town homes.

The report on home owning by Negroes from the 1920 Census is not yet available. It is estimated, however, that they now own over six hundred thousand homes; that is, one home out of every four which they have established is owned. This is a remarkable showing and has great significance for the future of the race. It is safe to say that any people, starting with a handicap of poverty and ignorance, who can in fifty years become owners of one-fourth of all the homes which they have, are making progress along those lines which make for a high degree of citizenship.

Religious Progress.—Fifty years ago religious denominations were just beginning to be organized in the South. In a few places, as Savannah and Augusta, Georgia, the Negroes owned church buildings. In many instances as at Beaufort, South Carolina, they worshiped with the white congregations. In most cases, however, they worshiped in rude praise houses, which were often nothing more than bush arbors. After emancipation they immediately began to replace these rude places of worship by more respectable churches.

No other people have given a larger percentage of their earnings for religious work. Over eight per cent of the total wealth of the Negroes is in church property. Fifty years ago the value of all the church property which they owned was only a few thousand dollars. Now they own church property to the value of about $90,000,000. The progress of the work carried on by Negro religious denominations during the past few years has been notable for the erection or purchases of large church buildings costing in many instances more than one hundred thousand dollars each. The tendency is to make of these churches social centers and to carry on many activities other than the formal church service. This would appear to be a new and distinct advance in the development of church work by Negroes.

Negro Ministers.—Fifty years ago it was difficult for a Negro minister to obtain a competent training anywhere in the United States. Only three institutions of higher learning, the Lutheran Seminary at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania; Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and the Oneida Institute, Whitesboro, New York, were open to them. In contrast with that time, there are now for the training of Negro ministers 35 theological schools and departments. Fifty years ago the only demand made of Negro ministers was that they should have good lung power and be able to put on the "rousements." Now, everywhere the demand is for a trained and efficient ministry.

More and more the General Conferences and other ruling bodies of Negro denominations are placing emphasis upon the importance of having trained and efficient ministers. The educational qualifications for persons to enter the ministry are constantly being raised. Negro ministers have developed sufficiently in strength and education to have high honors conferred upon them by white denominations. The Theological Seminary of Virginia, a white Protestant Episcopal institution located at Alexandria, at its 1917 commencement conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on a Negro, Archdeacon James S. Russell. The Protestant Episcopal Church has recently elected three Negro bishops in that denomination as suffragan bishops. They are Edwin T. Demby, Theodore M. Gardiner, and Henry B. Delaney.

At the 1920 General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the largest of all Methodist bodies, two Negroes, Matthew W. Clair and Robert E. Jones were elected with full ecclesiastical powers and prerogatives to the Board of Bishops of that denomination. It is worthy to note in this connection that the founder of mission work of the Methodist Episcopal denomination was a Negro. As a preliminary to the celebration in 1919 of the 100th anniversary of the beginning of missionary work of that denomination, a tablet was unveiled to this Negro at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, with the inscription, "John Stewart, Apostle of the Wyandotte Indians, Father, Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Missionary Work.—All of the important Negro denominations now maintain home and foreign missionary departments. As early as 1847 the African Methodist Episcopal Church organized missionary societies. It was not, however, until after Emancipation that Negro churches had opportunity to do aggressive missionary work. Negro churches are contributing every year over $250,000 for home missionary work. They are supporting some 200 home missionaries and giving aid to more than 350 churches. This is a larger number of churches and ministers than there were in regularly organized Negro denominations in 1866. Negro churches are contributing annually over $150,000 to foreign missionary work. The Negro Baptists are carrying on missionary work in Central, South and West Africa. The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church is carrying on missionary work in South America and West Africa. The African Methodist Episcopal Church carries on missionary work in Canada, the West Indies, South America and in West and South Africa. This denomination keeps two bishops stationed in Africa.

Sunday Schools.—Fifty years ago the organization of Sunday schools among the Negroes of the South was just beginning. There was at first not much difference between the day schools and the Sunday schools; for in each the people had to be taught the rudiments of learning. In 1863 there were in the Southland probably less than 100 Negro Sunday schools with less than 10,000 pupils. In 1922 there were more than 46,000 of these schools with over 2,250,000 pupils.

In June, 1912, just fifty years from the time that the first draft of the Emancipation Proclamation was made, the Sunday School Congress of the National Baptist Convention met at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. In those parts of the country where fifty years before, the Negroes in Sunday schools were being taught to read and write, these Sunday school workers traveled in special Pullman cars and met in a national organization. They had their own Sunday school literature and singing books, with songs and anthems written by Negroes, who themselves had either been slaves or were descendants of slaves. At this Sunday School Congress there were 17 editions of song books which had been written by Negroes and published in Negro publishing houses. There are now four large publishing houses which devote the larger part of their output to supplying the demand for Negro church literature. These houses are the A. M. E. Book Concern of Philadelphia; the A. M. E. Sunday School Union Publishing House of Nashville; the National Baptist Publishing Board of Nashville, and the A. M. E. Zion Publishing Board of Charlotte, North Carolina.

DISTRIBUTION OF AMERICAN NEGROES AND LOCATION OF IMPORTANT PRIVATE AND HIGHER SCHOOLS FOR NEGROES

Education.—Fifty years ago the education of the Negro in the South had just begun. There were less than 100 schools devoted to this purpose. In 1867 there were only 1,839 schools for the freedmen with 2,087 teachers of whom 699 were Negroes. There were 111,442 pupils. Eighteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight of these people were studying the alphabet. Fifty-five thousand one hundred and sixty-three were in the spelling and easy reading lesson classes. Forty-two thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine were learning to write. Forty thousand four hundred and fifty-four were studying arithmetic. Four thousand six hundred and sixty-one were studying the higher branches. Thirty-five industrial schools were reported in which there were 2,124 students who were taught sewing, knitting, straw braiding, repairing and making garments. In 1922 there are over 2,000,000 Negro children enrolled in public schools and over 100,000 in the normal schools and colleges. The 699 colored teachers of 1867 have increased to over 44,000, of whom 5,000 are teachers in colleges, normal and industrial schools.

Higher Education.—In 1863 there were in the South no institutions for higher and secondary education of the Negro. There were only four in the entire United States. In 1922 there are in the South 50 colleges devoted to their training. There are 17 institutions for the education of Negro women. There are 35 theological schools and departments. There are 2 schools of law, 2 of medicine, 2 of dentistry, 2 of pharmacy, 17 state agricultural and mechanical colleges, and over 400 normal and industrial schools.

Fifty years ago the value of the school property used in the education of the freedmen was small. The value of the property now owned by institutions for their secondary and higher training is over $30,000,000. Fifty years ago only a few thousand dollars was being expended for the education of the Negroes. In 1922 over $7,000,000 was expended for their higher and industrial training and $21,000,000 on their public schools.

Fifty years ago there were no Foundations specially devoted to the education of the Negroes. Now there are eleven Educational Funds from which the Negro is deriving some assistance. These are, the "African Third," the Avery Fund, the George Washington Educational Fund, the Miner Fund, the John F. Slater Fund, the Daniel Hand Fund, the Anna T. Jeanes Foundation, the Phelps-Stokes Fund, the Stewart Missionary Foundation for Africa, the Julius Rosenwald Fund, the Carnegie Corporation of New York and the General Education Board.

Contributions for Education.—From the very first establishment of schools among the freedmen they contributed liberally for their support. In 1867 there were 555 schools which were supported entirely by them and 501 in part. It is estimated that from 1866 to 1870, out of their poverty, the freedmen contributed over $700,000 for school buildings and the support of teachers. After fifty years their interest and self-help in education has in no wise abated. The Negroes are each year raising over two and a half million dollars for the support of their schools. Negro religious denominations are maintaining about 175 colleges and industrial schools.

Although there has been great progress in Negro education during the past fifty years, the equipment and facilities in Negro schools are, on the whole, far below those in white schools. The majority of the rural schools in the South are still without school buildings, and the average length of their terms is from three to five months. The Negroes constitute about eleven per cent of the total population of the country. A little more than two per cent of the $1,288,000,000 expended annually for education is spent upon them.

Fifty years ago there were no national organizations among the Negroes. There are now for their educational advancement the American Negro Academy, the National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools; for their economic advancement there are the National Negro Business League, the National Bankers' Association and the National Ass'n of Insurance Companies; for their professional advancement there are the National Medical Association, the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, the National Negro Bar Association, the National Negro Press Association and the National Association of Colored Musicians. In the interest of Negro women there is the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs. There is also the National Urban League for Social Service Among Negroes and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Occupations.—Fifty years ago, with the exception of a few carpenters, blacksmiths and masons, practically all the Negroes in the South were agricultural workers. Freedom gave them an opportunity to engage in all sorts of occupations. The census reports show that there are now very few, if any pursuits followed by whites in which there are not some Negroes. There are over 60,000 in the professions, that is, teachers, preachers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, editors, etc. There are some 50,000 engaged in business of various sorts. Fifty years ago there were in the South no Negro architects, electricians, photographers, druggists, pharmacists, dentists, physicians or surgeons; no Negro owners of mines, cotton mills, dry goods stores, insurance companies, publishing houses or theatres, no wholesale merchants, no newspapers or editors, no undertakers, no real estate dealers, and no hospitals managed by Negroes. In 1922 there are Negroes managing all the above kinds of enterprises. They are editing 450 newspapers and periodicals. They own 100 insurance companies, 700 drug stores and over 40,000 grocery and other stores. There are 500,000 or more Negroes working in the trades and in other occupations requiring skill: blacksmiths, carpenters, cabinet makers, masons, miners, engineers, iron and steel workers, factory operators, printers, lithographers, engravers, gold and silver workers, tool and cutlery makers, etc.

Inventors.—Fifty years ago it was unlawful to issue a patent to a slave, and the Attorney General of the United States had just ruled that in spite of the “Dred Scott” decision patents might still be issued to free persons of color. Since that time over 2,000 patents have been granted to Negroes. These have been chiefly for mechanical appliances and labor-saving devices. Some of the things which Negroes have recently invented are, a telephone register, a hydraulic scrubbing brush, a weight motor for machinery, aeroplanes, an automatic car switch and an automatic feed attachment for adding machines.

In Business.—In 1866 it was not in the imagination of the most optimistic that within fifty years Negroes would be making good in the field of finance, be receiving ratings in the financial world, and be successful operators of banks. When in 1888 the legislature of Virginia was asked to grant a charter for a Negro bank, the request was first treated as a joke. There are now 14 Negro banks in that state and 78 in the entire country. They are capitalized at about $100,000,000. Another evidence of the progress of the Negro in business is the buying of property in which hundreds of thousands of dollars are involved, as for example the Strand Theater Building on Broad Street in Richmond, Virginia, was sold to a group of Negroes for $113,000 cash. The United Investment Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia, bought property on Auburn Avenue at an expenditure of approximately $100,000. The Jesse Binga Banking Firm of Chicago purchased property on South State Street for which $200,000 was paid. In almost every city where there are any considerable number of Negroes, they have either purchased or erected substantial and commodious buildings to house their business enterprises. The North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company has erected a seven story office building at Durham.

In Agriculture.—Great progress has been made in agriculture. In 1866 there were in all the United States only a few farms controlled by Negroes. They now operate in the South, 915,595 farms which are 243,282 more than there were in this section in 1866. Negro farm laborers and Negro farmers in the South now cultivate approximately 100,000,000 acres of land, of which over 40,000,000 acres are under the control of Negro farmers. The increase of Negro farm owners in the South in the past fifty years compares favorably with the increase of white farm owners.

Before 1866 there were no Negroes controlling farms in the South. There were on the other hand in this section, 672,000 whites operating farms, practically all of whom owned their farms. In fifty years the number of farms operated by whites in the South increased by 1,168,000. Of this increase, 729,000 or 45 per cent were of owners and 889,000 or 55 per cent were of tenants. During this same period 915,595 Negroes acquired control of farms; of this number 212,365 or 23 per cent were owners.

When the great difference in the condition of white and Negro farmers fifty years ago is taken into account, the progress of the Negroes compared with that of the whites makes a commendable showing. For when at the close of the Civil War the Negroes started on their career as farmers they had no land and no experience as farm owners or tenants; none of them became farm owners by inheritance, nor did any of them inherit money with which to purchase land. Of the million and a half white farmers added since 1866, a large number were the children of land owners.

Property.—During the past fifty years there has been a rapid increase in the wealth of Negroes. According to the most recent reports concerning property owning, it is found that in 1920, Negroes in North Carolina paid taxes on $53,901,018 worth of property. In Virginia, Negroes in 1921 owned 1,911,443 acres of land valued at $17,600,148. The total assessed value of their property in that state was $52,505,951. In Georgia where there has been a continuous report on Negro property owning for a half century, it is found that in 1875, the Negroes of that state had acquired almost four hundred thousand acres of land, (396,658), valued at $1,263,902. The total value of the property on which they were then paying taxes was $5,293,885. In 1920, forty-five years later, the Negroes of Georgia owned 1,838,129 acres of land valued at $20,808,594. The value of their total property in that state had increased from $5,293,885 to $68,628,514. Through purchases and increases in values, property holdings of Negroes of the country increased during 1921 by probably 50 million dollars. It is estimated that the value of the property now owned by Negroes of the United States is over one billion five hundred million dollars. The lands which they now own amount to more than twenty-two million acres or more than thirty-four thousand square miles, an area greater than that of the five New England States, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

No other emancipated people have made so great a progress in so short a time. The Russian serfs were emancipated in 1861. Fifty years after it was found that 14,000,000 of them had accumulated about $500,000,000 worth of property or about $36 per capita, an average of about $200 per family. Fifty years after their emancipation only about 30 per cent of the Russian peasants were able to read and write. After fifty years of freedom the eleven million Negroes in the United States have accumulated over $1,500,000,000 worth of property, or over $100 per capita, which is an average of $350 per family. After fifty years of freedom 80 per cent of them have some education in books.

Place of the Negro in American Life

BY ISAAC FISHER, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE
University Editor, Fisk University

IF the dominant social concept in the United States is that of the pagan nations of old, that the individual exists for the State, then there is no need for any discussion such as the subject above suggests. To the peremptory challenge, "What is the Negro's place" in any department of American life? one may give the dogmatic reply: "His place is only such as the dominant power of the politically organized American Commonwealth may assign to him, independent of ethical considerations, so long as he remains a minority group, unable to make effective protest."

If we hold the more enlightened concept that the life and happiness of the individual are subject to the wishes of the majority of his fellows, more or less benevolently disposed to each member of society, then the answer would be: "As a minority group, the Negro's place must be that sanctioned and prescribed by that dominant majority."

If one calls to his assistance historical and metaphysical disquisitions on the philosophy of the State, he will find a great cloud of witnesses of the highest human authority who support the view that the place of the Negro in American life today must be that assigned to him by the dominant majority. If that position is less advantageous, less equitable, less encouraging to him than that assigned to other social groups under the same government, he may complain of his lot, but the political system under which he lives has established the basis of that system which is the right of the majority to rule.

To the Negro student of political science who observes our American system of government in its philosophical aspects, there seems little hope that his race will be relieved from certain disabilities which the white race have laid upon him because of the color of his skin. The broader that student's knowledge of the science of government, the greater is his discouragement, because he proceeds from a premise which affirms that the majority of white people, themselves the majority in our population, object to giving him a status comparable with their own. Since this is a government of majorities, the whites will always impose a status of inequality upon the Negro. This view gives no encouragement for the future since it gives no reason to believe that white neighbors will change their attitude toward darker races.

There is, however, an influence in America, too little appreciated by such colored people, which keeps the door ajar for the Negroes of the land. This influence opened the door even when their white brothers, this same majority, had decreed perpetual bondage for the black people in America. This influence also conditions, more or less, every phase of American life to-day, even though, in many places, it does not seem to control the councils of men. That influence is Christianity.

The Supreme Court of the United States has made official declaration of the character of this nation, which shows whether we are trying to sail by the theories of pagan nations, or whether, in spite of contrary captains, we are aiming to follow the needle which points always to the polestar of Christianity. The Supreme Court, in Holy Trinity v. United States (143 U. S., p. 471), entered into an exhaustive review of the founding of this nation, to prove historically by "organic utterances" which "speak the voice of the entire people" that "the people of this country profess the general doctrines of Christianity, as the rule of their faith and practice." (p. 470) Concluding this survey, the Court said:

"If we pass beyond these matters to a view of American life as expressed by its laws, its business, its customs and its society, we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth [i. e., that Americans are a Christian people]. Among other matters note the following: The form of oath universally prevailing, concluding with an appeal to the Almighty; the custom of opening sessions of all deliberative bodies and most conventions with prayer; the prefatory words of all wills, 'In the name of God, amen'; the laws respecting the observance of the Sabbath.....; the churches and church organizations which abound in every city, town and hamlet; the multitude of charitable organizations existing everywhere under Christian auspices; the gigantic missionary associations, with general support, and aiming to establish Christian Missions in every quarter of the globe. These and many other matters which might be noticed add a volume of unofficial declarations to a mass of organic utterances [already reviewed by the Court] that this is a Christian nation."

THE CHRISTIAN BASIS

Those who plead the case of the Negro must come to see that the one unassailable ground on which his defense can be laid is that "This is a Christian nation," dedicated to the principles of righteousness taught by Christ. Without the liberty to argue from that ground, a minority group, sharply differentiated from the dominant political majority by color, appearance, and by social and economic status, can have little standing in court. The history of society gives little support to the theory that the dominant group is compelled to administer society according to the wishes of the minority simply because this latter group feels aggrieved by the fiats and customs of the ruling group.

The tremendous significance which resides in the phrase, "This is a Christian nation" can best be seen by contrasting the attitudes of pagan nations to their suppressed groups with those principles of society which Christ and His early disciples laid down for the construction of a better social organization than the world had known before.

the Pharisees that the "Master . . . regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth."

From all this it is easily seen that the Negro has but one plea which cannot be set aside by the practice of nations, or the teachings of political science. That plea affirms that "This is a Christian nation"; and, therefore, its dealings with all of its people ought to be governed by higher principles than color, caste, race considerations, traditions, prejudices or expediencies.

The moment a Negro bases his plea for a man's full chance in America on the ground that this nation is dedicated to Christian principles and practices, that moment he is able to argue for that place in American life to which any merits he may possess entitle him. The realm of Christianity is the only forum where those who preach caste find themselves confounded and ashamed. It is the only court in all history out of which a writ of prohibition against race distinctions as well as race discriminations will run. It has never recognized the existence of "lesser breeds" of men, to say nothing of sanctioning a code of morals which places them "without the law."

AN AMERICAN CITIZEN

If, then, the Negro plead in the name of Christianity, he has the right to ask that his place in American life be that of an American citizen. What place does a citizen occupy in American life? He is "a regular member of the community, subject to its ordinances, obligated to its support and defense, and entitled to its protection." The protection to be given includes protection of natural rights, i. e., his right to grow on equal terms with all of his neighbors—the right to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and it includes his juristic or positive rights, rights secured by law, namely, the right to life, security, liberty, and opportunity.

The 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States changed the status of the Negro from that of a slave to that of a citizen, so far as legal fiat could accomplish that result. So far as the organic law of the nation is concerned, there is neither distinction nor discrimination on grounds of race, and none in connection with it save those which have been placed there by judicial construction. The only argument against this position is the practices of American life, which follow the view that American citizenship of the Negro does not mean so much in fulness of opportunity, security of life and property, and freedom from artificially created obstacles to progress as American citizenship means, for example, to a white man or woman.

But although the Negro holds American citizenship by fiat of the Constitution, the individual states of the Union and custom have tied a number of "strings" to that citizenship. If one would under-in Christian society "There is neither Jew nor Greek." The great feature which distinguishes a Christian nation from the pagan nations of old is that the latter believed and acted on the principle that some men are born to be "always up," while others were destined to be "always down." In a Christian nation there are no impassable gulfs fixed by accident of race. A nation must either abandon its race distinctions and discriminations in conferring benefits upon its citizens or surrender the title, "a Christian nation."

If America is a Christian nation, there is no need to draw up a bill of particulars indicating what the Negro's place in American life ought to be when he meets the requirements of American citizenship. There is not an intelligent American living who does not know what that place ought to be. On the other hand, if this is not a Christian nation, it will be useless to argue for specifications to cover the Negro's case, since the appeal will fall upon deaf ears and untouched hearts.

Whatever position the Negro may deserve by reason of his merit, his character and his fidelity to American ideals and institutions—a position which would be given without reservations to fellow Americans of the white race of equal merit—that position ought to be given to him, nothing more and nothing less. It ought not to be necessary for the Negro or his friends, when asking for a man's full, free chance for him to argue that the Negro wants this but does not want that, that he seeks this but is not seeking that.

It will be necessary to draw up a bill of particulars pointing out specific places for the Negro to occupy in American life only when and on condition that we reject the thesis to which our Supreme Court has given support and which affirms that "This is a Christian nation."

PRAYER OF THE RACE THAT GOD MADE BLACK

BY LUCIAN B. WALKINS

A Virginian Negro whose health was wrecked in Overseas Service during the late war.

We would be peaceful, Father—but when we must,
 Help us to thunder hard the blow that's just.
 We would be manly, proving well our worth,
 Then would not cringe to any god on earth.
 We would be loving and forgiving, thus
 To love our neighbor as Thou lovest us.
 We would be faithful, loyal to the Right,
 Ne'er doubting that the day will follow night.
 We would be all that Thou hast meant for man,
 Up through the ages, since the world began.
 God, save us in Thy Heaven, where all is well!
 We come, slow-struggling, up the hills of Hell.

THE NEGRO IS RELIGIOUS—EAST CALVARY METHODIST CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

The Negro Religious and Social Life

BY I. GARLAND PENN, CINCINNATI, OHIO

Secretary of the Board of Education for Negroes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church

ALL concede that the Negro race is naturally the most religious in America. There have been mental reservations as to the quality of his religion, but no difference of agreement as to quantity and volume.

The religious character of the Negro is, however, suggestive of strength. The humble backwoods Negro who gave as his testimony, "I's had a ha'd time since las' meetin'; I's been sometimes up and sometimes down. Spects I's broken eb'ry one of de ten comman'-ments since our las' meetin', but I tanks God I's not los' my 'ligion yet," had back of it faith and motive.

The Negro's religion partakes of genuine childlike simplicity in its faith and expectancy. He believes in "waiting patiently on the Lord." The docility of the Negro and the fact that he is easily managed with kindness are righteous qualifications. The cheerfulness of the Negro shows the genuineness of his religion. Had he not faith, patience, docility, cheerfulness, with a willingness to suffer long and endure hardships, he would be a revolutionist and an iconoclast. This he is not, greatly to his credit.

The fact, that, in spite of the genuineness of the Negro's religion, his ethics have not always squared with his professions, is due largely to his ignorance and much bad example and teaching. He is imitative because his White brother pounds into him the superiority of the White race. When he sees the "Boss" or the "Colonel", who is a member of the Church, loose in morals and yet prosper as a "green bay tree," he thinks that he may do likewise.

THE GROWTH OF THE NEGRO CHURCH

The Negro's religious progress is indicated in the growth of the Negro Church. Before a right to education or to engage in professional or business life was given to him, he had begun his church. In days of slavery he was permitted training in religion, such as it was, but was denied by law all education of the mind. Some of the religious training was good, but much of it was of the "servants obey your master" type. It could scarcely be expected that his religion would be ethically straight when his only approach to Biblical teaching was through interpreters who interpreted the Scriptures for selfish ends.

Thus the Negro organized his church, or was organized into the church, with that kind of training. In spite of this there were Negroes in the slave period who were great preachers of righteousness. Among the pioneers and organizers of the Negro Church were:

Rev. Lemuel Haynes was such an able and forceful preacher that he became the first Negro Congregational minister serving a white congregation in 1785 at Torrington, Conn.

The Revs. George Leile, Jesse Peters and Andrew Bryan were founders and pastors of the First African Baptist Church at Savannah, Ga., between the years 1780 and 1788.

The Rev. Richard Allen, ordained by Bishop Asbury of the Methodist Episcopal Church, founded in Philadelphia in 1787 the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Absalom Jones also began his labors in 1787 as the first Negro to be ordained a priest in the Protestant Episcopal Church, while Rev. Peter Williams later at New York also organized a Protestant Episcopal Church in that city and became its rector.

The Rev. Henry Evans was an acceptable and powerful Negro preacher in 1790 in Fayetteville, N. C., and his remains rest there under the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church as his monument.

The Rev. John Variek organized the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church in New York in 1796.

The Rev. John Chavis was the first Negro to be commissioned by a Presbyterian General Assembly in 1801 as a home missionary. His work was in Virginia and North Carolina. The Rev. John Gloucester was the first Negro pastor of a Presbyterian Church in America in 1810, and his work was in Philadelphia.

The Rev. Harry Hoosier, known as "Black Harry," traveled with Bishop the day time and the men arranged to have one of their number attend him each night. When he died, after having been a member of the community three years, Lacey's father made a coffin out of pine boards, and the women tacked common black cloth on the outside of the box. The meetinghouse was not large enough to hold all who came to the funeral and the service was held in the open. No relatives or white friends of the departed schoolmaster were present; yet there were many mourners. Lacey's grandfather, a licensed preacher, conducted the service. As he could not read, one of the larger school girls read the Scripture. Always fresh in the memory of Lacey Williams is the voice of the girl as she read:....."my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

THE CABIN IN ALABAMA WHERE LACEY WILLIAMS WAS BORN

The body of the departed schoolmaster was buried near the home of Lacey's grandparents and on the same day his grandmother planted two or three walnuts near the grave. One tree sprang up and marks the spot today.

A short time ago, Dr. L. K. Williams, pastor of the largest Baptist church in America, took a photograph from his desk and handed it to his visitor. It was a picture of the little shack in Alabama in which Dr. Williams was born; near the shack stands the walnut tree which was planted in memory of a New Englander who went South to die and to live again in the lives of the lowly people whom he served. In the heart of the pastor of this great Chicago church there is an undying gratitude which expresses itself in a desire to transmit to others what he received from the man who seemed to have so little and yet had so much to give.

In his young manhood Dr. Williams came into contact with other teachers from the North and teachers in the South and at Hearne Academy and Bishop College, Texas, and at Arkansas Baptist College, he was helped onward by men and women consecrated to ideals which are symbolized by an all but forgotten grave beneath a walnut tree near an old cabin in Alabama.

Does it pay to give to those who have not wherewithal to repay, "hoping for nothing?"

A riot occurred in Chicago which we can never forget. When it was at its peak white people and black walked the streets in a certain section of Chicago's "Black Belt" without fear of molestation. Within the shadow of the tall spire of Olivet Baptist Church Negro boys and white boys played peaceably. When Governor

DR. LACY WILLIAMS' CHURCH IN CHICAGO

Lowden of Illinois formed his Race Commission he invited Dr. Williams, the pastor, to become a member of this investigating body. During many years, under many conditions, he has been tested and everywhere has exhibited a constructive citizenship that is needed by whites and Negroes during this period of race adjustments.

For a majority of adult Negroes the church constitutes their chief point of contact with society. For them the pastor must not only be their spiritual leader, but he must lead his people out of an economic "house of bondage." His counsel is sought on every occasion not only as pastor and religious adviser but as legal, political, business, health or domestic adviser. Dr. Williams is pastor of a church whose membership has reached the 10,000 mark. He is said to have a wider influence than any mayor of a city of twice that population. There seems to be no limit to the range of activities outside of his routine duties as the leader of a large church.

The underlying principles governing the workers at Olivet were revealed during the race riot and later during a critical period of unemployment. Seventy-one meetings of the Chicago Peace and Protective Association were held at Olivet during the riot and were attended by Negro politicians, club workers and by large numbers of Negro pastors of all denominations. The big church bus was sent under police protection into certain sections of the "Black Belt" to bring together these leaders of the people. In these conferences were discussed all measures projected by state and municipal agencies for the alleviation of the trouble. The faith of men was strengthened through prayer. Wise counsels prevailed. Every day the men who attended the meetings went back to their several neighborhoods to impart to the members of their congregations, societies and lodges the sanest views expressed at the meetings. Chicago owes a debt of gratitude to its Negro ministers for the efforts they made to check the disturbance by urging their people to keep off the streets during the race riot, and the worthy part they took in restoring peace and confidence between the warring factions after the fires of hatred had burned out.

An interesting story could be written concerning the activities of any one of the many departments of Olivet. The children's church might claim attention on Sunday morning while three other large services are being held in the building at the same time. During the week the day nursery and the kindergarten are well worth a visit. The Elizabeth McCormick Foundation makes possible a free children's clinic in connection with the kindergarten. Olivet Church forever will be associated in one visitor's memory with many long tables surrounded by little children with heads bowed over bottles of creamy, fresh milk while they sing grace. Associated with this scene is a barefooted boy in Alabama sitting on a split-log bench listening to the talks of a crippled Union soldier and wondering what the teacher meant by "destiny".

Olivet Christian Center, of which Dr. Lacey K. Williams is the pastor, has now twenty-four paid workers; two foreign missionaries; five students maintained in theological schools; three Sunday morning overflow services; children's church; day nursery; free kindergartens; free labor bureau; health bureau; fourteen women's circles (pastor's aid and missionary); five regular choirs; Community Sing Association; brotherhood and sisterhood; Boys' Industrial Organization; Mother's Community Club; Community Flat Owning Association; Daily Vacation Bible School, enrolling 350; $11,600 contributed during 1921 to needy churches in Chicago; total disbursements during 1920, $87,138.52; value of church properties and furnishings, $294,255.59. Does it pay to educate the Negro?

Progress in Inter-Racial Cooperation

BY WILL WINTON ALEXANDER, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Director of the Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation

THE progress of Negro Americans in acquiring property, education and home building since 1865 makes one of the most encouraging stories in American history. The figures which set forth this progress seem an exaggeration to one with a superficial knowledge of the situation.

This progress is the result of a half century of cooperation between the most aspiring of the Negro race and the white men and women who had faith in the Christian religion and in education as a means for meeting the highest life needs of these unprivileged and struggling people. The number of cooperating white men and women was at first not large. The founding of Hampton, Atlanta, and Fisk Universities belong in the annals which record the highest acts of faith in the history of American Christianity. All sections of the country were represented in this early group of white cooperators. Dr. Atticus G. Haygood, a Georgian, was the first executive of the Jeanes Fund. Dr. James H. Dillard, of Virginia, now the President of the Jeanes-Slater Board, will take a place along with General Armstrong, the founder of Hampton, in the importance of his contribution to Negro education, and will rank second to none in the sacrificial life which he has given this work.

The demonstration has been made. The results are beyond anything which could have been expected by those who pioneered this work. The fruits are influential educational institutions, Christian homes, and a group of cultured, self-sacrificing Negro leaders.

It should be remembered that all of this is the result of cooperation. Tuskegee, with the exception of the life of its founder, the most impressive single fact in American Negro life, was the expression of the desire of white leaders to help Negroes help themselves. In all of these efforts from the very beginning, Negroes have had a part. Sometimes it was a gift of labor or a small amount of money, again it has been a long life of service as teacher, as in the case of Professor William H. Crogman, a Negro who has just retired after forty-five years as professor and leader in Clark University, Atlanta.

By 1914 this work of cooperation had borne a rich harvest. It was beginning to spring up in many new places. The women of two distinctly southern white denominations were beginning really statesmanlike cooperation with Negro women.

The participation of America in the World War gave the best possible opportunity to test the results of this work. All who had made any contribution to the development of Negro Americans had cause to rejoice because of what they were ready to give in men, money, and loyalty to win the war. At the beginning of America's participation in the war there was a very definite effort to spread disaffection among the Negroes generally. However, four hundred thousand Negro boys served with the colors, and not one Negro was found guilty of disloyalty. The Negro troops received many individual and regimental citations for bravery.

At home in America during this period, especially in southern communities, racial attitudes greatly improved. As never before, Negroes were recognized as a community resource. In every war task they were given a part and usually did more than their assigned share. By their participation in the war, they won a larger appreciation in the hearts of thoughtful persons in all sections of the nation and revealed the best in Negro Americans to themselves. To southern white people, who had been following closely this racial situation, the war time attitudes seemed to have brought in a new day in race relations.

The spiritual reaction which followed the armistice swept over southern communities, leaving both races in a fog of rumor and suspicion difficult to explain. It seemed that all the ground which racial good will and cooperation had gained would be lost.

In the face of this situation the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation began its work early in the year 1919. It is made up of influential leaders, Negro and white, all of whom live in the South. The Commission is the result of a conviction which arose in the hearts of many thoughtful people during the war that race relations must be brought more completely under the influence of Christian motives and ideals. It is the result of the best Christian conscience in the South. It registers a rising tide of determined and intelligent good will among the best whites and Negroes in this section.

The Commission has not sought so much to build an organization as to plant the idea and spirit of cooperation as the best method of dealing with racial situations. The field of this planting has been first of all a small group of white and colored leaders in each of the eight hundred local communities having a bi-racial population. In addition, an effort has been made to secure the cooperation of students and college leaders, editors and church and civic leaders. The chief effort, however, has been to develop in each community a group who would cooperate in securing racial justice and in promoting racial good will.

The response has been very encouraging. The churches in the South have committed themselves in theory to the work, while many of the most influential Church leaders are striving to make inter-racial cooperation real. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has organized a commission whose purpose is to give support to this work and assert the sufficiency of the Christian gospel to meet the present racial situation in America.

The editors of daily papers are beginning to direct the news items, which in the past have been a most pernicious source of racial misunderstanding, in the interest of understanding and good will. The editorial columns are almost always sympathetic in their attitude on race questions.

The women's organizations have readily assumed a responsibility for bridging the gulf which exists between white and colored women. The utterance of the first south-wide group of women ever called to consider this question, in the autumn of 1920, contained the following:

"We, a company of southern white women, find ourselves with a deep sense of responsibility to the womanhood and childhood of the Negro race and also with a great desire for a Christian settlement of the problems that overshadow the homes of both races.

"We recognize and deplore the fact that there is friction between the races. But we believe that this can largely be removed by the exercise of justice, consideration and sympathetic cooperation.

"We are persuaded that the conservation of the life and health of Negro children is of the utmost importance to the community.

"Since sacredness of personality is the basis for all civilization, we urge:

"a. That every agency touching the child life of the nation shall strive to create mutual respect in the hearts of the children of different races.

"b. We are convinced that the establishment of a single standard of morals for men and women, both black and white, is necessary for the life and safety of a nation. We, therefore, pledge ourselves to strive to secure respect and protection for womanhood everywhere, regardless of race or color."

This sentiment has been endorsed by leading women throughout the South, and definite responsibility assumed by powerful women's organizations for making the sentiment function in the communities and institutions involved.

Very slowly the world learns the New Testament teaching as to the essential unity of humanity. Any successful racial cooperation must have this in mind. It has sometimes been lost sight of in the South. Negro communities have been thought of as a group apart.

Right thinking whites and Negroes do not desire the amalgamation of the racial stocks; without this the races in America will continue to be bound together in a common life. No lines of separation can change the fact that men are neighbors. The races are one in physical well-being, economic destiny, and moral progress. Sickness among Negroes means sickness for white neighbors; a denial of full protection of the law to the humblest Negro means the break-down of legal protection for all. The state which led the nation in 1921 in the number of Negroes lynched, led also in the number of acts of mob violence against whites, the climax being reached in a reported tarring and feathering of a white woman. When the Ku Klux were accused of the latter, the official organ of that organization reported that the crime had been committed by white women.

Unbelief and cynicism alone can defeat good will and racial justice. A cynical American, white or colored, in relation to this question is as dangerous as a traitor in war. To the Church, white and colored, the nation has a right to look for the power to beget the faith that is needed to solve this problem. These churches, whatever else they evangelize, at home or in foreign lands, must aggressively attempt to Christianize American race relations or lose the loyalty and confidence of thoughtful people. To awaken the faith which would make inter-racial cooperation real in America is a service worthy of the highest things men have ever expressed of the Church.

The races in America have a better chance to build good will and cooperation than anywhere else in the world. A common language brings Negro and white workmen infinitely nearer than if they spoke strange tongues. Here the races have a common flag. No flag in the world has back of it such a philosophy upon which to build race cooperation. No one can question the loyalty of Negro Americans. They have fought with American armies from the Boston Massacre to Metz. Their patriotism is one of the most beautiful things in the nation.

Christianity is the greatest influence in the world. The God who hath made of one blood all nations of men is the acknowledged God of white and Negro Americans. In the first centuries this faith overleaped racial antagonisms and social distinctions such as are not to-day to be found in the entire world. American Christians, white and Negro, must assert this common faith anew for the sake of the races throughout the world.

A difficult task! One that shall not be accomplished tomorrow! Only politicians and children must depend wholly on tomorrow for success. Decades and centuries are on the side of Christian statesmanship.

The Negro View of the White Man

BY REV. HAROLD M. KINGSLEY, CLEVELAND, OHIO
Pastor of the Mt. Zion Congregational Church

“WE have lost faith in the white man’s religion and morals,” exclaimed a Negro at an informal conference in the South a few months after the war. Excitement had not yet died down; blood was at a fever heat; men were wrought up with great expectancy and a new self-appreciation; the rights of oppressed minorities were being championed by the foremost world leaders; men of our race had made the supreme sacrifice; the disappointment of those who were tacitly given to understand that the war made no difference, that they were expected to resume an oppressed, a backward status—in other words, that the war had brought no improvement in the status of the Negro in America, struck home with the sharpness of a sword and the bitterness of gall. The man who expressed this sentiment to the Negro conference, and to two white delegates honestly seeking a basis of understanding, was not a radical but a thoughtful, conservative, life-long friend of the white man and one of the steadiest champions of peaceful Christian race-adjustment.

The white visitors were surprised to find that the Negro not only expected a larger life as a result of his sacrifices and loyalty during the war, but that resentment had been aroused by the new wave of oppression and violence that swept over the country, manifested as it was, in Washington, Chicago, Omaha and St. Paul, and that, with bitterness in his soul, he was beginning to doubt the integrity of the white man, his sincerity of purpose and the genuineness of his moral and religious professions. Perhaps no more self-revealing and truthful sentiment was ever uttered than this regretful indictment by this black friend of the white man.

Picture a race, the victim of caricature and fun making, judged by its lowest and most inferior types, after the Civil War the object of a brutal opposition to all fundamentals of progress, and later, after overcoming this opposition to an extent and pushing upward to a surprising degree, to be made the butt of cruel jokes, the object of coarse ridicule, and you may understand somewhat the resentment in the colored man’s mind when he thinks of the white man’s attitude.

Take for instance Charles Gilpin in “The Emperor Jones.” Without a doubt it is a splendid vehicle for an excellent actor, a ladder for struggling, deserving talent where no ladder existed before, a play that blazoned for the first time a Negro’s name in the magic electric lights of that peak of the actor’s ambition, Broadway,

New York. The more recent play, "Taboo," is another attempt to feature Negro life, this time, however, with the Negro playing a less stellar role with no personality as outstanding or talent as well-rounded as Gilpin's. Or in the field of recent fiction, take Stribling's "Birthright," the most outstanding, and possibly one of the first serious attempts to dramatize the pulsing life of the teeming Mississippi bottom.

The Broadway "Emperor Jones," with a year's run, is a long step forward from the one-night stand, canvas-tented "Alabama Blossoms' Minstrels." "Taboo" is a serious play, earnestly, and intelligently attempted, and the "Birthright" is a painstaking attempt to present phases of Negro life not white-washing his exploiters, but on the other hand, pulling the cover from respectable, hoary-headed hypocrisies; still they all indicate, unintentionally possibly, an attitude which is humiliating, false and unfair. They reveal not representative phases of the Negro's splendid struggle for a higher life, with all its finer and holier implications, but in the "Emperor Jones," depict a study of fear, true to life possibly but entirely untypical. "Taboo" is a study in superstition, presenting a dramatization of an entirely minor and obscure phase of Negro life, an effort worthy of a better cause. The "Birthright" is a picture showing that a Harvard education makes no difference, for once a Negro always a Negro, and on only the lowest terms. Here are presented the reasons why intelligent Negroes temper their exultation over these serious attempts to present Negro life because it is the same old injustice in a new form. He asks, "Why does the white man always insist on treating the Negro as a joke?"

Possibly few white men realize just how the Negro regards them. If they did know they would have a profound shock as did these white men who met those Negro leaders in the South. As a result of this attitude on the part of the white man, as the Negro fairly or unfairly conceives it, we find that the Negro race is becoming a fertile field for new movements. In the first place, as malcontents they were susceptible to a degree to German propaganda during the war and to radicalism later. In the second place, as a race hungering for brotherhood and democracy, the very fundamentals of Christianity, they give a new kind of audience to economic movements like the Garvey movement, which promises freedom, to political movements like Bolshevism, which promises equality, and to religious movements like Bahaimism, which promises brotherhood and love.

I do not agree with the writer of "The Rising Tide of Color," that white civilization is in danger of black inundation, or that the next great war will find all black people lined up against all white people, for history seems to teach that people do not divide on the basis of race and color but they divide on principle; black, white and brown arrayed against black, white and brown. If the good opinion of the lowly is worth having, (and certainly even a child's opinion of a man has some value), so possibly has the Negro's opinion of the white man a real value. The rehabilitation of faith in Christianity is not needed for the Negro loves his God and his Jesus, but there is need for the rehabilitation of faith in the white man's brand of Christianity so that it will be seen to involve love, justice, brotherhood and democracy.

Possibly no Anglo-Saxon ever put the issue quite so bluntly and boldly as does William James in his letters when he asks, "What right of eminent domain has the white man over darker races?" He beseeches his fellow men of the white race to cease their "snivelling hypocrisy" and not to cloak economic exploitations with fine phrases and soft platitudes. Here he indicates the very kernel of the matter and reveals a most unusual ability for seeing one's self as others see one. Those who doubt the truth of other statements in this article, will do well to ponder the words of William James.

The challenge is not so much that of the redemption of the black man, as that of the redemption of the black and white, working together, through an actual practice of Christianity. There is still in the minds of belated races a doubt as to the honesty of the white man's religion. Thus the situation that confronts the white man to-day for his own salvation is that of practicing the kind of Christianity he preaches, and to erase, by a new demonstration of Christianity, a doubt which is not only humiliating to the conscientious white man, but is detrimental to the honest black man. Let us together restore confidence, not in the white man's Christianity or the black man's Christianity, but in the power of the religion of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, which includes a practice of the doctrine of brotherly love to embrace all men.

To be concrete in suggestion, I would point out that in addition to the splendid publicity campaign carried out by religious organizations North and South, that the Home Mission Study Course presents probably the finest approach for the young mind that has ever been presented to the public in such a form, and that the Inter-racial Commission of Atlanta and the Commission on Church and Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches are all together, with other similar agencies, presenting a program and a solution that will bring better understanding, more helpful appreciation and a real working fellowship which will help to change the Negro's unfavorable estimate of the white man.

versally extolled as the most remarkable in human annals. We search the records of history in vain for its parallel. Their progress has been remarkable in material things, in intellectual advancement and in religion. There are now over 4,800,000 Negro church members in America. The evangelization of transplanted Africa is the greatest triumph of missionary endeavor since Columbus first planted the Christian cross in the virgin soil of a new world.

Much of this wonderful progress has come to the Negro through his environment and the aid of the white people but after all the only help that is worth while is the help that helps the helpless to help themselves. The question then is, How far has the Negro traveled along the road of self-sufficiency? It makes no difference how much seeming progress a people may evince under alien tutelage, it is not real unless it prepares the beneficiaries to do without the benefactors.

Selfishness and greed are the inheritance of man in his natural state. It is only through the culture of Christian conscience that altruism makes itself manifest. It would not be surprising, therefore, if the fortunate Negroes devoted their chief energies towards the personal acquisition and gratification of selfish aims. It is interesting, however, to note the progress which has been made in the direction of altruistic service. There are 4,231,638 Negro communicants belonging to independent Christian Negro denominations whose church property amounts to $90,000,000. They maintain 45,000 Negro churches, with a corresponding number of ministers, every penny of whose support is contributed directly by the Negroes themselves.

These Negro churches also contribute every year over $250,000 for Home Mission work and over $150,000 for Foreign Mission work. They support over two hundred of their own home missionaries and give aid to more than three hundred and fifty needy Negro churches.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church is the largest of the independent Methodist bodies. This Church operates a number of schools and colleges on a property basis of more than a million dollars. Their annual budget for general religious and educational purposes amounts to about half a million of dollars annually. This Church alone has undertaken a five million dollar drive for the purpose of extension of religious and educational activities.

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church organized its foreign work in 1892 and has in the foreign mission field three stations, five out-stations and eleven organized churches.

The Baptist Church contains the bulk of Negro church membership. They maintain a number of schools and colleges supported wholly by Negro contributions. The Virginia Theological Seminary and College at Lynchburg, Virginia, was organized in 1888 by elements of the Negro Baptists of that state. This school has at present a property valuation of over a quarter million of dollars and has just erected a building costing $130,000 contributed wholly by Negro Baptists. They carry on a missionary work in five countries and have on the mission field fifty-one stations and forty-three organized churches.

The Lott-Carey Foreign Mission Convention represents branch Baptist churches operating independently in South America, Liberia, Zululand and Nyasaland, (Africa) and also in Haiti.

In the Young Men's Christian Association the Negro has shown commendable effort towards self-help. The Negroes now have Y. M. C. A. buildings in twelve leading American cities and toward the total cost the colored people themselves paid $287,597 and also contribute $322,742 towards the annual maintenance of these buildings. In all large cities the Negroes are rapidly approaching self-maintenance in this branch of service.

The Negro shows his kinship to the great body of white Americans by speaking the same language, worshiping the same God, striving after the same ideals, longing for the same destiny. None but the most confirmed pessimist can say that the past half century has not given a satisfactory indication that he will be able to meet every exaction that the coming years may impose upon him.

Negroes, North and South—A Contrast

BY EUGENE KINCKLE JONES, NEW YORK CITY
Executive Secretary of the National Urban League

SO accustomed are we to accepting generalizations upon the condition of the Negro North and the Negro South that the whole truth is rarely, if ever, known. The picture of the North, painted by early migrants to their friends who stayed in the South, as "a land of plenty," one of "full manhood privileges," of "unbounded opportunities" was and still is in large measure an illusion. So the South is misunderstood by men who have never lived there and have fed only on tales of its horrors. In both sections there are advantages, counter-balanced and frequently nullified by handicaps.

There are however, certain very definite units by which the status of the Negro North and the Negro South stand out in striking contrast. The usual figures supporting this contrast are familiar to the average reader. Better educational facilities, compulsory education and longer school terms have reduced illiteracy and lifted the average intelligence wherever applied. Naturally $66 per capita spent in 1920 in New York City for the education of its children produces a higher grade of intelligence in the Negro children of New York than does the $1.25 per capita per year spent in South Carolina for Negro education. In home ownership, the Negroes of the South would compare more favorably. In farm ownership no real comparison between North and South is possible for 77.4 per cent of the Negroes in the North live in cities while about 79 per cent of those in the South live in rural districts. Except in such cases as southern New Jersey, southern Illinois and southern Ohio, and certain of the mid-western States such as Kansas and Missouri wholly or in part southern, the Negro farm owner, like the Negro farmer in the North, is a rarity.

Business development among Negroes in the South has far exceeded that of those in the North. We see this in the growth of life and fire insurance companies and banks and trust companies and building construction by Negro contractors. Negroes in northern cities have concentrated instead of spreading out over the smaller communities. This has tended to enlarge the Negro's business opportunities among his own people. In the South, the urge to economic development has been mainly prejudice which inspired discourtesies, and in frequent cases absolute refusal to serve Negroes. In the North race prejudice was not so conspicuous. The development of real estate concerns, theatrical ventures and insurance companies has had its stimulus more largely in the secondary factor of race pride and in the normal desire of many Negroes to enter business as a vocation, playing upon the factor of race pride and relying upon a Negro market and custom for support.

In the North the Negro possesses the ballot which gives him the usual air of independence that men possessed of suffrage have everywhere. The lack of the ballot in the South keeps the Negro forever "within the veil."

EXPLODED THEORIES

Some years ago, Negroes who came to the North to live, seeking to improve their lot from an economic and social point of view, were considered by their southern Negro friends as well as by southern whites as deliberately risking their lives because of their supposed inability to acclimate themselves to the rigors of the northern winters. Yet today, we find the Negro death rate in cities like New York, and Springfield, Mass., lower than the Negro death rate in the cities of the South. The difference is more significant because the migrant population in the North is heavily centered around the more advanced age groups where normally the death rate begins to increase. Infant mortality among Negroes in northern cities is lower than in cities of the South.

Ten years ago, the great proportion of Negroes in the North were employed in domestic and personal service. In the South a much larger proportion of Negroes were skilled and able to work at their trades. Following the increase of nearly a million Negroes in the North during the five years of the migration there has come an unprecedented expansion in industry and the professions. The number of doctors, lawyers and clergymen has almost doubled and, of particular significance in contrasting the two sections, they are able when once an opening has been made to advance higher in northern than in southern fields. There are now managers of dressmaking establishments; foremen and forewomen in factories; teachers in the public schools, stenographers and bookkeepers in large business establishments; electrical, mechanical and civil engineers. Many of these occupations are regarded as entirely without the Negroes' sphere in the South. Openings in many of these lines may be said to be due in large measure to the ceaseless effort and educational propaganda both by the Negroes themselves and by sympathetic and far-sighted white people.

This change in the northern situation has affected the South's attitude towards the Negro. At first the South took an attitude of indifference, then of alarm and finally of serious meditation and discussion of the questions involved. Just prior to America's participation in the world's war, when Negroes first began to come from the South, articles frequently appeared in southern dailies to the effect that this increase in migration would rather relieve the South of some of the "problem" and would place on the North a little of the "burden" which the North was wont to accuse the South of handling ineffectually. Later, employment agents representing northern industries were arrested because of their efforts to secure southern Negro workers for northern plants. Prepaid tickets were not delivered to Negroes to whom the railroads were directed to deliver them and trickery was resorted to to prevent Negroes who already had paid for their tickets leaving the South for northern points.

Then followed the rapid growth of the Ku Klux Klan and the development of a counteracting force in the form of inter-racial committees which have labored to establish a better feeling between the two races and for the encouragement of social justice, fairer play and a more equable division between the racial elements in the South of the fruits of progress. This same period has tended to unite the northern and southern elements of the Negro population in a spirit of comradeship.

Some years ago it was not unusual to hear heated discussions among the older Negro families of the North as to the proper treatment of southern Negroes who came North. Any Negro who happened to have seen the light of day north of the Mason and Dixon line considered himself superior to any Negro born in the South no matter what his attainments may have been. Booker T. Washington was considered, especially by many northern Negroes, an enemy of the race because he dared to speak in northern communities in favor of industrial training for Negroes even in the South. This feeling of opposition continued in a measure even after many municipalities of the North had established systems of vocational training for the northern white public school children. Today we see a new situation. One finds the same language used among the intelligent Negroes of Richmond or Atlanta or Jacksonville in regard to Negro aspirations and rights as in the drawing-rooms of the most cultured Negroes of Boston or Chicago. Of course this sectional feeling among Negroes has not entirely disappeared. A few days ago, a young colored woman of good education and progressive ideas, born and reared in New England by parents who came from the South, vehemently stated in my presence, "I just do not like southern colored people. There are only a few that I care anything about!" She thinks that southern Negroes are slothful, indolent and lazy and that these undesirable qualities introduced by southern Negro migrants tend to lower the estimate placed by the community on Negroes already in the North. Here, incidentally, is an evidence of the fact that the propaganda intended for white consumption had had its effect even on the Negro's mind.

It is interesting to note the nativity of some of the leaders of national public thought among Negroes. W. E. B. DuBois, editor of the "Crisis," is a native of Great Barrington, Mass.; James Weldon Johnson, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—Jacksonville, Fla.; George Cleveland Hall, prominent physician and public welfare worker of Chicago—Ypsilanti, Michigan; Dr. E. P. Roberts, former member of the Board of Education, New York City—North Carolina; Dr. W. G. Alexander, member of New Jersey State Legislature—Lynchburg, Va.; Robert S. Abbott, publisher of the "Chicago Defender"—Savannah, Ga.; William H. Lewis, former U. S. Assistant Attorney General—Portsmouth, Va.; Ferdinand Q. Morton, member New York City Civil Service Commission—Mississippi; Mrs. Mary Talbert, former president of the Federation of Colored Women's Clubs—Oberlin, Ohio.

The colored people of America no longer ask a man for information concerning his birthplace. They ask only whether he wishes all manhood rights for his Negro brothers and whether he will be fair and truthful in making representation for the race in high places and in conferences where the masses cannot speak for themselves.

Considerable discussion has been indulged in recently over the question as to whether separate colored schools, especially high schools, would be desirable in the North on the ground that colored teachers would give more encouragement to Negro pupils. The good effects of such a system some have sought to prove by referring to the larger percentage of colored children in attendance at high schools in such border cities as Louisville, Washington, Kansas City, St. Louis and Baltimore as compared with cities in the North where the students are not separated according to race. While no careful analysis of this question has yet been made, most writers on the subject relying upon observation as a guide, it is significant that in the high schools of Hartford, Connecticut, the colored pupils comprise 2.2 per cent of the school population while the Negro population is only 1.8 per cent. It should be noted that Hartford's migrant Negro population has been mainly adult and therefore has had but slight effect on the high school population.

While the white people of the North and of the South have approached an understanding on sectional matters, the northern and southern Negroes have also come to a better understanding and the Negro population has distributed itself so widely over the country that the Negro has gained admission to discussions on race adjustments where white people from the South and from the North were both present. Time is a great solver of problems and we have lived to see the day when these four groups are represented at common meeting places where mutual problems are discussed and programs worked out. The adjustments are not to be made in a shorter time than it required to work out the theory of race relations. These theories are yet to be universally applied, and the adjustments will take considerable time. But the "way out" is clear.

HOME MISSION STUDY, 1922-23

THEME: The Negro in America

BY FRANKLIN D. COGSWELL

Secretary, Joint Committee on Home Mission Literature

The new program of materials for Home Mission study books is the fourth which the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Missionary Education Movement have published jointly. The developing co-operation between these two bodies has been one of the interesting features of interdenominational missionary work in recent years. Not only have the two organizations forming the Joint Committee on Home Mission Literature found the partnership enjoyable and profitable, but there have been many evidences of appreciation on the part of churches throughout the country that there is now presented to them a single program of interdenominational Home Mission study materials.

It is with great satisfaction that the Joint Committee presents this year a series of publications on "The Negro in America." Not since 1908 when Miss Mary Helm's excellent books on this subject were issued has it been the theme of an interdenominational program of study under the auspices of the boards of Home Missions. The vast movements of the war period have now brought the question before the world so prominently that its significance is realized more solemnly than ever in the past.

The theme is one which calls for such a variety of treatment that two study books of entirely different character have been provided in the new series of publications now coming from the press.

*The Trend of the Races*¹ by George Edmund Haynes, Ph.D., is more than a study of the Negro; it is a study of the relations between the black and white races in America and an earnest attempt to suggest means through which the two groups may find a way to interracial peace. It is of special interest that this book comes from the pen of a Negro leader. He speaks out of a long experience in the work of the Church and in many movements for larger understanding between the races. A graduate of Fisk University, Dr. Haynes took his advanced degrees at Yale and Columbia. Out of his studies of the problems of his people in New York there grew the National League on Urban Conditions among Negroes of which he is the founder. He then returned to Fisk as professor of sociology and economics. With the entrance of the United States into the World War there came the need for a special agency of the Government for investigation of industrial conditions among the Negroes and Dr. Haynes was appointed Director of the Bureau of Negro Economics of the United States Department of Labor. Later he took charge of the Negro section of the Home Missions Survey of the Interchurch World Movement. Within the past few months he has received the honor of being elected Secretary of the Commission on the Church and Race Relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Dr. Haynes' careful, sympathetic study of this problem, which is of world significance and which he shows in its world setting, will not only inform its readers and stimulate helpful discussion, but it will also deepen Christian convictions and lead its students back to Christ to find in Him alone the active good will and the understanding love which will overcome prejudice and establish brotherhood.

*In the Vanguard of a Race*² by Mrs. L. H. Hammond makes an admirable companion book to that by Dr.

Haynes, for its twelve biographies show concretely what contributions Negro men and women are capable of making toward the solution of the vexed problems of their race and toward the enrichment of our common life. Mrs. Hammond is widely known for her pioneer work in woman's home missionary circles of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for her service on the Interracial Commission and on the Southern Publicity Committee. Her book, "In Black and White," has had a large circulation and she has been a frequent contributor to magazines. Her new book comes from many months of personal investigation and study. She introduces a group of Negro men and women who have made outstanding achievements in many fields of endeavor and whose stories, with a few exceptions, are but little known to the general reading public. For young people, especially, these life stories will be rewarding. They are not only interesting but they also raise many vital questions for discussion. The wide range of the book is indicated by the fact that it tells of the lives of three educators, Booker T. Washington, Robert R. Moton, and Miss Nannie H. Burroughs; a doctor of medicine, Charles V. Roman; two ministers, one pastor of a large institutional church in the North and the other a worker in a rural region of the South, William N. DeBerry and James H. Dunston; a leader in community work for girls, Mrs. Harris Barrett; a builder of agricultural prosperity, John B. Pierce; a woman banker, Mrs. Maggie L. Walker; a composer of music and singer, Harry T. Burleigh; a missionary to Africa, Miss Martha Drummer; and a poet, Joseph S. Cotter, Jr.

For boys and girls of about nine to twelve years of age there is an interesting book of stories of Negro life, *The Magic Box*³ by Anita B. Ferris whose children's books on missionary subjects are well known. These stories will help in the building of finer attitudes of sympathy and respect on the part of white boys and girls toward their Negro playmates.

Mrs. E. C. Cronk is collecting and editing a series of stories of Negro boys and girls for primary children. These will be published with six large pictures (9x13 inches in size), similar in form to the other titles in the primary picture story series.⁴

There will be Suggestions to Leaders of Study Classes for each of the books, that for "The Trend of the Races" being by Miss Estelle Haskin of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Leaders' Manual for "The Magic Box" is by Miss Alma N. Schilling and will have many valuable suggestions for programs and service activities for boys and girls.⁵ A picture sheet, "Negro Neighbors,"⁶ will contain a number of half-tone pictures for use in making posters, class-books, and scrap books.

COOPERATION BETWEEN WHITE AND COLORED WOMEN

By

MRS. CHARLOTTE HAWKINS BROWN,
SEDALIA, N. C.

I was fortunate enough to be one of four colored women present at the great Memphis Conference, where for the first time in the history of the South, white women, from all denominations, met to confer with and listen to Negro women out of whose hearts poured the accumulated sorrow and chagrin of fifty years' growth.

This conference was epochal in many ways, for the white men and white women assembled there seemed determined to know nothing among themselves "save Jesus Christ." The slogan on the wall in emblazoned letters read: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

We realized, before we left that meeting, that women must be drafted to put "over the top" this spirit to the forty million or more white women who were not there. For the first time in my life I found myself thinking white. My heart ached for this little group of women who had to carry a message of "love of Negroes" to thousands who had been taught from youth to despise men and women because they were black.

The exhilaration of it all, the faith, the courage that these women inspired in us have smoothed out many rough places, straightened many crooked paths and given us a song in the darkest night. These women sounded the first real clarion note for cooperation between white and colored women.

The present condition of unrest among Negroes all over the country is no light matter to be set aside. Wise people will try to think sanely. We are at the cross-roads. We need the kind of advice the Prophet Jeremiah gave to trembling Judah. There are many ways of solution advanced, but both races must deliberate and ask the question, "Where is the good way?"

Humiliated often by some undeserved unkindness and injustice because of our color, though a mist of tears bedim our eyes, our souls must cry to the God who hears, "Where lies the path of duty for me?" I am confident that the solution of this grave problem is in His hand and when He overturns heaven, hell and earth to solve it, I want to be found doing the duty that lies nearest me.

I have always been an optimist, but the optimist must sometimes picture the dark side that men may know the truth. There are a few outstanding facts which cannot be ignored. Ignorance of these things can but retard progress toward the desired end. In the Spirit of Him who said, "Blessed are the peace makers," I make this contribution of my conclusion as to the basis of cooperation between white and colored women.

A good Southern friend said one day to me, "Charlotte, the Northern white people do not understand the Negro as we do. We Southern women understand you perfectly. We have been reared with you, nursed by you. Your folks have been everything in our homes and we know you through and through." At that very moment, I was struggling not to resent her calling me by my first name, because I knew that it was from force of habit in dealing with Negroes as servants, differentiating in no way between us, and not as a term of endearment. A Northern friend who has been interested in the education of Negroes, a woman who has put her time and energy in helping to build a first-class Negro school, calls me by my first name as a term of endearment (so she says) but one day when I addressed her fourteen year old girl by her first name, in no uncertain language I was told, "You must not call my children by their first names; you are not their social equal."

Now, here are two women representing the best blood in the Anglo-Saxon race in America, Christian women willing to give of their time and means for the uplift of my people. I must speak of them as friends for they have met the test, although we are taught to believe that there can be no real friendship except upon a basis of mutual respect. Do these women respect me? Of course they do. They recognize two codes of ethics—one for white women and another for colored. I must exercise no choice as to how I am to be addressed, although I was a full-grown woman when I formed the acquaintance of these two equally lovely women and met them in the capacity of a teacher of Negro youth. If I wish to retain the friendship I must not insist on being spoken to in terms different from John, the butler, or Mary, the cook, however hard I may have struggled to get my recognized title to "Miss" or "Mrs."

The intelligent Negro woman is truly between Scylla and Charybdis. She is humiliated by the attitude of the average Southern white woman, who knows little of her soul's deepest cravings for home and all that goes to make home pure, comfortable, cultured and refined, who never seeks to know her desires and aspirations for her black babies, who knows nothing of her schools, her churches or any form of recreation by which her children may thrive. She is oftentimes scorned by the Northern white woman, who, when the Negro woman crosses the Mason and Dixon line, lest she may forget her former surroundings, constantly reminds her of the inferior position she occupied in the South and of the utter hopelessness of her desire to be regarded as a woman among women. This same Northern woman spends thousands of dollars to educate the Negro woman's children but will not spend one moment to find out why this product of her investment cannot be given a fair showing in some place where she is not needed as cook or maid.

What a chasm there is between us—deep, fathomless! The Negro woman wonders if there is a place on earth where she can stand and breathe freely and think in terms of a woman.

There is no more mistaken idea afloat than that which conscientious Southern women have advanced; that is, that they know the Negro women, when only one out of a thousand has ever had a conversation with a well-trained Negro woman, or has been in a modern, cultured Negro's home. Few, if any, have taken time to go into a Negro schoolroom or church.

Nine times out of ten, a white woman speaking to a colored audience must refer to her "black mammy" or her cook as her source of information on questions regarding the Negroes of her locality. They usually put up "my Jim" or "my Mary" as criterions. This fact alone has become distasteful to the cultured Negro woman, not because she doesn't know real womanhood whether it be found behind pots and pans or behind a typewriter desk, but because of the wholesale elimination of that large class of Negro women who are not menials but who are plying their hands daily, sinking their very souls into the problems of uplift among their people. These utterances referred to have caused many an otherwise beautiful and helpful address to fall on deafened ears. As presiding officer in many such a gathering, I've had to pray God to keep down open revolt.

On the other hand, the average Northern white woman, if she does not ignore you or make you feel some kind of inferiority, is so overly nice and patronizing, you feel yourself an object of special care. There is nothing more uncomfortable. Why can we not just be let alone to think and plan and move and have our being without special legislation or care?

I slept, one night in the North, in a telephone booth because there were no colored people in that town and the president of the local Y. W. C. A. said, "We simply cannot take in a colored woman." I had been serving as a non-resident member of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A. for some time.

Do you ask me why I write in this strain? I am not bitter; I trust in God, but "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." There can be no cooperation between white and colored women, North or South, unless we approach it by way of the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." White women must make a study of different groups of Negro women and not attempt to cure all maladies with one remedy.

Many people, North and South, are still thinking in 1865 though living in 1922. Many still refer to the Negro women who are mothers of white children (poor creatures, sinned against far more than they have sinned) forgetting the thousands of Negro women who are bent on building homes and on educating their children. Many are entering the professions of law, medicine and dentistry. Truly the Negro woman has come through "sorrow, through pain and through woe."

The intelligent Negro woman does not ask charity but an equal chance. She merely asks respect for her judgment and intelligence.

The intelligent Negro woman is in a position to improve greatly the quality of service rendered the white women by the working women of the Negro race and will do it more conscientiously as she receives the sympathetic interest and cooperation of the women who employ.

Here are a few suggestions: (1) Colored women resent being called by their first names, except by intimate friends with whom such a privilege is an exchange. (2) Colored women should be consulted about plans that include them. (3) There should be Christian frankness and open-mindedness in the approach to any problem. (4) The natural assumption that all white is superior and that all black is inferior must be eliminated before any really cooperative spirit can be fostered.

If the white woman could think black twenty-four hours, better still, be black for two hours, there would be no Negro problem in America. I have so much faith in her sense of justice and fairness when she allows her mind to be receptive to truth, that I feel certain she will set up such a howl that the United States Senate, Congress, Judges of Supreme Court, the President himself, will adjourn all business to listen to the appeal of the American white woman for her sister in black.

A growing number of white women are eager to be fair and just in their dealings toward us. They are seekers after light, but I am convinced that many of them have some sort of Negroid fairness and justice, the sort of especially prepared black plaster ordered for our woes, when we merely want human justice. I want to bow in reverence, however, to that consecrated Christian group from the North who have laid their very lives on the altar to usher in a new day for us—that group to whom most of us are indebted for the light we have.

I verily believe that for the next twenty-five years the races' great efforts would better be directed inward to teach the white folks to love colored folks, to teach colored folks to love white folks, to teach every man to love and hate not. This is the Gospel of the Lowly Nazarene who braved the prejudice and narrowness of His own people to save the world. Our steps toward cooperation must be along these lines.

The Negro woman pledges anew the devotion she exhibited so recently in the Nation's peril when she worked side by side with the white woman for the safety of this land and the defense of a flag which is hers by heritage as much as it is the white woman's. In that same spirit of unselfishness and sacrifice she offers herself to serve again in any and every way that a courageous facing of duty may require. In return she asks the white woman to help usher in for her these few things for which her heart longs, deprivation of which has grieved her conscience and embittered her soul:

1. Raise your cry against that blackest of American evils directed largely against the members of the Negro race—lynching of human beings.

2. Ask for equal accommodations for Negroes in places offering service to the public.

3. Establish inter-racial committees in every local community for interchange of thought in regard to the problem of adjustment.

4. Make a careful and comprehensive study of the social and economic problems the Negro is forced to face.

5. Give equal educational advantages and equal opportunities for recreation to Negro children where the races are naturally segregated.

6. Approach the problem of the Negro in the same broad spirit that you approach all other race problems. Seek to know the truth about the Negro woman as you sought to know the truth about the women of Belgium and France.

Until white women are willing to strive with Negro women in their effort to attain unto these things that are dear to the hearts of all American women, it is a waste of time and effort to seek cooperation.

"To Postage 5.00"

What is extravagance and what is economy in missionary work?

Are there some things we can not afford NOT to do?

Is there a scattering that yet increaseth and a withholding that tendeth to poverty, in missionary administration?

As I made the entry in my missionary expense account, "To postage, $5.00," I unconsciously sighed. How I wished it were not necessary to spend a cent of the missionary funds for running expenses, so that every dollar of it could go straight to the field!

I wondered who gave that five dollars I spent for postage. Possibly it represented the entire missionary gift of two or three women who had little to give and had made much denial of self to give that little. And I had spent it for ordinary postage stamps!

I turned to my stenographer. The missionary gifts of self-denial were helping to pay her salary, too. Somebody's gift went into the very stationery on which I wrote. I sighed again as I began to dictate letters. I wished I could pay all these office expenses myself and not touch a cent of the missionary money to meet them.

In a few days the answers to some of the letters came in:

"I am enclosing my check for $100.00 for the Rescue Work in Japan."

"My sister and I have decided to assume the support of the Bible Woman about whom you wrote us, at $45 a year."

"Our young people voted to take the support of the teacher of whom you wrote. We understand the salary will be from $500.00 to $600.00 a year."

"If I can be of service in the work you outlined in your letter, count on me."

"We have succeeded in organizing a Children's Society with sixty-two members. The interest is fine and I am hoping we can train all these boys and girls for missionary service."

Then I saw the grain of wheat, that seemed to have fallen into the ground only to die, multiplied a hundred fold. One little postage stamp had been multiplied into one hundred dollars. Another had brought forth six hundred dollars and another forty-five dollars, while yet another postage stamp had enlisted lives for service. Then I knew that the woman whose gift went into postage had given to missions as truly as the woman whose gift went into Bibles.

Our sentimental shortsighted economies are often our most reckless and costly extravagances. With beautiful sentiment I had almost denied the Lord's work the stenographer who wrote the letters; the stationery on which they were written; and the stamps which mailed them. In order that I might proudly boast of my economy and have my friends commend me for it, I had almost failed to enter doors of opportunity opened before me.

It is a little soul that cannot recognize the work of the grain of wheat that must fall into the ground. A sentimentalist insists that every cent of his gift must go straight into the hands of the missionary. A great soul says, even when multitudes are perishing in famine, "If my gift will mean more in purchasing wheat to be planted, that more wheat may be brought forth, it is well."

The letters that are not written often cost more dearly than those that are. One letter that was not written cost a Board $125.00. A special gift would have been continued if a letter asking for its continuance, and telling something of the work done, had been received. It was much more extravagant not to write that letter than it would have been to write it, and to spend two cents in mailing it.

Two secretaries arrived for an important meeting. The expense account of one was $35.21; the other's expenses were $40.16. Said the treasurer to Mrs. A., as she handed her a check, "I am afraid Mrs. B. is a bit extravagant. Her expenses are $4.55 more than yours."

Mrs. A. smiled heroically. "Yes," said she, "I've never yet spent a cent of the Lord's money for Pullman fare. I sat up all night, and did without breakfast this morning, to cut down the expense."

While an important committee meeting, that cost the Church $3.75 a minute, in the sum total of the expenses of all the members, was held, Mrs. A. with a throbbing head slipped out to a drug store to buy a coca-cola, and later went over to the parsonage to lie down a few minutes. Her thinking was clouded all the day, but she patted her own back with a feeling of great virtue. Had she not saved the Church $4.55? She did not reckon that she was guilty of inexcusable extravagance in spending $35.21 from which there were practically no returns.

We may save the price of a doctor's salary in a mission station, but if it costs us the lives of missionaries, which represent the investment of thousands of dollars, have we been economical? We may save the salary of a stenographer, but if it costs us the efficiency of an office, have we been economical?

We may not enter on our books "To postage, $5.00," but if that means we fail to enter $100.00 and $45.00 and $600.00 gifts that might have been entered; if it means that we fail to enlist lives that might have been enlisted; we stand convicted of extravagance even though we, in all sincerity, protest that we are practicing economy.

May we be preserved from wasting our Lord's money. May we spend every cent with our eyes fixed on a lost world for whom Christ died, and waste not even a cent of it in luxury. But may we also be preserved from the extravagance of inefficiency in our service.

May we be preserved from diverting any funds from their rightful work, but may we also be preserved from the shortsighted littleness of thinking that in order to make a gift to missions, we must put it into the hands of a missionary and see that he spends none of it for house-rent or food or clothing.

"To postage, $5.00!"

No matter whose was the gift, no matter what self-denial it had involved, I knew as I read the answers to the letters it sent out, my Lord's money had not been wasted; neither had it been hid in a napkin; but it had been invested for Him in a way that had brought many other gifts. It had enlisted lives in His service, and I was content.

We are accustomed to seeing luxury lists, and lamenting them. Is it not high time we faced a list of a slightly different type and considered some of our most needless and most costly extravagances that short-sightedness lists as economy?

SOME MISSIONARY EXTRAVAGANCES WE CANNOT AFFORD

To train, equip and salary a medical missionary and let him walk to make all his calls, when an automobile would enable him to conserve his strength and reach twice as many people.

To pay thousands of dollars to train and equip a missionary and then break her health by not giving her a simple, quiet home in which to live instead of a native house.

To permit a secretary, receiving $3,000 a year, who has more work than he can do and more opportunities than he can meet, to do the work a stenographer at $1,000 a year could do more efficiently in one-fourth the time the Secretary spends on it.

To let our pastors do the work of messenger boys in order to save postage.

To hamper the work of our congregations by not providing automobiles for our pastors if automobiles would enlarge their usefulness and increase their efficiency.

To spend one cent of our Lord's money for any of these things, or for anything else that is a matter of personal luxury, not really necessary to efficient service in lives thoroughly consecrated to Him.

REACHING STUDENTS FROM OTHER LANDS

BY MRS. FLORENCE EDMONDS

From the uttermost parts of the world they have come, students ten thousand strong, to America seeking its best; the best of its institutions, the best of its industries, and of its civilization; but most of all these eager, young people have come to study us—you and me. They come with faith and almost childish belief in our greatness and goodness and a generous spirit of willingness to sit at our feet and learn. For is America not a Christian land, a land of ideals? They ask for education and spiritual bread; shall they be given a stone?

Fifteen hundred of these men and women are studying in the colleges and professional schools of New York City. Here they are thrown into the varied surface life of an impersonal city of millions. Twelve years ago, a friendly "Good Morning" was spoken to one who was lonely, one who said that no one had greeted him in any way during the three weeks that he had been in New York, and thus a vista of opportunity for service presented itself, and the Intercollegiate Cosmopolitan Club came into being.

The object of the Club is furthered in a few very simple but definite ways. There has been a constant effort to avoid over-organization and the impersonal. At the beginning of the college year, invitations are sent to the groups of students from foreign lands and to a selected group of Americans to attend an opening reception. This is followed by an invitation to a Sunday evening supper and it is this supper, this breaking of bread together, that has been a friendship net, where we have come to know and understand one another. Differences of race and color are forgotten in a common brotherhood. Friends from colleges, friends from churches of different denominations, friends from all walks of life, some of the finest and best American people that New York has to offer, are invited to these suppers in the hope that individual contacts will be made. And they are. These friends serve in many ways, by asking students to their homes, to concerts, to churches, and to the country for week ends. Students from other lands do not seem to feel interested so much in what we teach them, as in what they find in us, as representatives of our theories of theology, creeds and code. They are interested in spirit and truth as expressed in individuals.

Another activity of the Club is its National Nights. On Saturday evenings, at intervals of every two or three weeks, enjoyable social evenings are held. These occasions afford opportunities of exhibiting the music, manners and customs of different nations and are always very enjoyable.

Saturday excursions are made to different places of interest, up the Hudson River, around Manhattan Island, and to industrial and municipal institutions in or near the city. These are pleasant outings, promoting acquaintances among the members and have great educational value as well.

Several groups meet in Earl Hall Sunday afternoon at four-thirty to discuss questions of national and international scope, the object being to bring about a sympathetic understanding of one another's point of view, and, whenever possible, a solution of a given problem by the highest moral, ethical and religious standard.

Many requests come from churches, schools, clubs, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s asking for foreign students able to speak on the educational, social, economic and religious conditions in their native lands. This is a splendid opportunity for club members to bring to Americans a knowledge of conditions in different parts of the world and thus are they furthering the cause of international understanding.

Students from other lands are met on their arrival in the city, advised regarding board and lodging, provided with opportunity for self help when needed, visited when sick and every effort made to make their stay in this country beneficial and enjoyable.

The work is promoted by its student cabinet, native bureaus and staff. It has the support of many American friends and has grown from year to year until now the club has a membership of 632, from 66 countries, studying in 51 colleges and professional schools.

To the Sunday supper there came one evening a friend, one who is always watching for a worth-while opportunity for world service. He mingled quietly with the students and only those nearest him knew that a great and generous man was one of the company. He felt the atmosphere of simple friendship and goodwill and later said that he was glad to be identified with an undertaking whose "possibilities for good seemed almost limitless." He proved his faith in this movement by donating funds sufficient for the erection of a building to be known as International House, a home and friendship center in New York for students from every land. This building will provide rooms for 500 students, every one with sunshine and air, and the need for these can only be appreciated by those who have tried to find them. It will offer its facilities, social and physical, to several times this number. There will be a separate dormitory hall for women and one for men and a central activity building for both. It is hoped that the House will be a light-house of goodwill and that it will represent the united interest of all who have a special interest in the presence and welfare of the large number of foreign students in New York.

The site is on Riverside Drive overlooking the glorious Hudson River. Near by is Grant's Tomb, upon which, when a war was finished, was inscribed, "Let Us Have Peace." Upon the facade of International House, which will help to prevent wars, we hope there may be written, "Peace Comes from International Understanding, Brotherhood, and Goodwill."

ADVERTISING AND REGISTRATION DAY

By MRS. HENRY LEVERICH

"I haven't been interested in the work of our church until recently because I haven't known anything about it," said a bright young woman recently. Then she added, "I come to church on Sunday mornings, but I have never had the slightest idea of the activities or of any call for me to do anything except to attend church."

Is there not some way in which we can bring before the people the various activities of our churches with their call for enlistment and service?

Why not a church fair or exposition—not to sell ice cream and cake or old clothes but to present our educational program? Because we have advanced far enough in a real stewardship program to discard booths and counters as commercial devices for financing our Lord's work, let us not overlook their educational value in presenting our program and in enlisting recruits.

St. Luke's Parish, Montclair, New Jersey offers an Advertising and Registration Day.

Advertising and Registration Day

In October, after vacation time, as the year's work started the first Woman's Meeting was announced on the program as "Advertising and Registration Day for the Women of St. Luke's," and this was the way it was carried out:

Each Department of Women's Work was invited to participate and to arrange a booth or a corner of the large assembly room in some unique fashion, keeping in mind the fact that the booth or corner must advertise the department.

The Women's Auxiliary had a very large space for its Social Service Work. From the center of the ceiling came bands of brown and yellow crepe paper, each band reaching to tables assigned to various sub-departments in the Social Service Work, viz.: Hospital Committee, Day Nursery Committee, Fresh Air and Convalescent Committee, Settlement Work Committee, Daily Vacation Bible School Committee, St. Catharine's Home Committee, etc. These tables were each a clever presentation of the work they represented.

The Box Department of the Women's Auxiliary had a dummy figure from a tailor shop, which was dressed in garments already made and materials to be used in the making of garments, also surgical dressings, etc.

The Church Periodical Club, Comfort Club, Altar Guild, Church School and Church School Service League all had original and expressive booths.

The United Offering advertised itself by having made a large "Little Blue Box" exactly like the real little blue boxes. At the top of this larger box was a shelf and on the shelf were miniature scenes which told facts about the United Offering.

For instance, one was a bit of Alaska and the Anvik Church, which was built by a part of the First United Offering (all of which was made out of Dennison's paper with cotton to imitate snow). Inside of the big, blue box was seated a very pretty, enthusiastic young woman who talked through the slit in front of the box and told passersbys about the United Thank Offering. She interested sixty-three women to take the little blue boxes—women who had never before known about them or had been interested in them previously.

There was a program, six women in a talk of three minutes each telling something vital about some department of the work. Then everybody was asked to visit the various booths and register for service at whichever one made the strongest appeal to them.

There was a blackboard on the stage and the registrations were recorded during the afternoon while tea was being served, and while every department was tense in its effort to send the largest number of registrations.

It proved to be an interesting as well as a very educational afternoon and a surprising number of new workers were enrolled.

Here and There Methods

A Progressive Missionary Party affords opportunity for missionary education served with sociability. Arrange six or seven tables with a hostess at each table. The people move from table to table for a ten minute talk or discussion on some mission field or topic. As the bell rings all except the hostess go to another table. When all the guests have had ten minutes at each table, refreshments may be served.

* * *

Drawing room meetings held in some attractive home lend a delightful social atmosphere to a missionary gathering and interest many women who would not otherwise be reached. The visit of a missionary affords a good occasion for a drawing room meeting.

There is a hostess, of course, and a Reception Committee. The missionary may make an informal talk in addition to meeting all the guests present.

NEWS FROM MANY LANDS

NORTH AMERICA Relief Administration Work

SECRETARY Hoover reported in February that the total receipts of the American Relief Administration, since the beginning of its work in Russia had amounted to $52,919,000. These include $24,000,000 of Congressional appropriations, $12,200,000 gold from the Soviet Government, $10,000,000 charitable balance of the Administration, $3,600,000 worth of medical supplies from the American Red Cross, and $3,119,000 from numerous religious and charitable bodies in the United States, such as the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, the Federal Council of Churches, the American Friends' Service Committee, the International Committee of Y. M. C. A. and the National Lutheran Council. Mr. Hoover reported at that time:

"The famine is proving of even larger dimensions than anticipated, for the agricultural decadence outside the special drought region of the Volga Basin is so severe in some places as to amount to famine. The amounts of food estimated by the Soviet authorities as being available for towns in the non-drought area seem to have been much over-estimated."

Transportation is one of the biggest problems with which the Relief Administration has to deal in its efforts to sustain between six and eight million people.

The Sunday School Merger

THE words "Building Together" have been selected as the working theme for the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention, to be held in Kansas City, June 21-27, 1922. This slogan refers to the merging of the Sunday-school forces of North America into a single organization for purposes of efficiency and advance to be known as The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. This merger, which the convention at Kansas City is expected to ratify, will bring together the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations. The first has been carrying on its work in a wholly voluntary way for more than half a century. The denominations have not been officially connected with it in any manner, though many prominent denominational men have occupied positions of responsibility.

The second, which was organized in 1910, was purely official and represented nearly all of the Sunday-school constituency of North America. Before this Council had gone far in its program it became evident that the two associations were crossing lines and in some instances duplicating their work.

Southern Women and Race Problems

THE women's boards of the Southern Presbyterian, Southern Baptist and Southern Methodist Churches have endorsed the program of the women members of the Inter-Racial Commission, and have set in motion the machinery to carry it out in local communities throughout the South, through their local church societies.

The plan calls for three committees in each auxiliary to study the Negro homes, schools and churches of the community, with the aid of the colored women who are locally leaders among their people. From these studies a concerted plan of action is to be prepared, differing according to local needs, upon which the women of both races can unite, in cooperation with the county inter-racial committee. The Woman's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Diocese of North Carolina has appointed a committee to confer with leading colored women of the state to learn the needs of their women and children as they see them, and to form plans for cooperation.

Negro's Chance for Education

WE white Americans, writes George L. Cady in the Home Mission Monthly, "have built up for ourselves and ours a marvelous system of education. We have believed this is the way to push back the horizons and admit us into the larger life. And more, we believe this is the way to make Democracy safe. Democracy dies in the hands of the ignorant citizen. But of this the black man has had the very minimum. He has had no more than the crumbs which fall from the table spread for the children of the dominant race. For two centuries and a half we made it a prison offense to teach him to read and write. During his freedom we have hobbled his progress by the least possible educational opportunities. Until recently there were no public schools in the rural districts above the fifth grade that a colored boy or girl could attend. Now there are none above the eighth. Louisiana claims two high schools for 700,000 Negroes, but in New Orleans there is one high school with a capacity of 500 pupils for a colored population of 100,000, and last year for the first time they offered twelve grades."

Negro Rural Schools

THE Jeanes Fund, for the improvement of Negro Rural Schools, cooperated during the session ending June 30, 1921, with public school superintendents in 269 counties in thirteen states. The 272 Supervising Teachers, paid partly by the counties and partly through the Jeanes Fund, visited regularly in these counties 8,976 country schools, making in all 34,641 visits and raising for the purpose of school improvement $394,737. The total amount of salary paid to the Supervising Teachers was $214,033, of which the sum of $119,746 was paid by the public school authorities and $94,287 through the Jeanes Fund. These traveling teachers, working under the direction of the county superintendents, help and encourage the rural teachers; introduce into the small country schools simple home industries; give talks and lessons on sanitation, cleanliness, etc.; promote the improvement of school houses and school grounds; and organize clubs for the betterment of the school and neighborhood.

Important Negro School

C RARY Hall, the central dormitory of Morristown Normal and Industrial College, Morristown, Tenn., was destroyed by fire recently. The loss, above insurance and salvage, will be over $35,000.

Since the organization of the school in 1881, by the Methodist Episcopal Church more than 10,000 students have been trained in it. Of these more than 2,000 have gone out to teach among the people of their own race. Thus the influence of the school has been multiplied many times. By a special arrangement with the public school authorities the school provides instruction in the elementary grades to a large proportion of the colored boys and girls of the community in addition to the normal, college preparatory, and special courses upon which the chief emphasis is placed. There are in attendance to-day some of the fifth generation descendants of the first pupils enrolled in the school.

Negro Efforts for Betterment

VARIOUS movements organized by Negroes themselves have had much to do with the progress of the race. One of these is the Associated Negro Press. Another is the Negro Business Men's League, founded by Booker Washington. It has led to cooperation among colored people, and enables them to operate stores, banks, insurance companies, and many other race enterprises. Hundreds of men and women are given employment in race organizations, who have no hope of securing employment from white business firms except in menial capacities. Dr. Washington also established the Farmers' Annual Conferences, held at Tuskegee and at other points in the South.

The bulk of the Negro people is in the South and farming must be the chief source of their living. This movement keeps the agricultural idea foremost. Better housing conditions, improved farming implements, better stock, rotation of crops, and modern methods of cultivating the soil are stressed in these meetings.

—Home Mission Monthly.

Spiritual Capacity of Negroes

THE greatest strength of the Negro in the past has been his capacity for religion; the Church will fail in a high privilege if it fails to conserve and develop this capability. Bishop Bratton of Mississippi recently said: "The Negro is the most religious race in the world, and it is a great mistake to assume that he is now, or will be in the future, satisfied with any form of religious emotion that will feed his superstition. This may be true of the very ignorant, though I do not believe that anybody has sufficiently tested the matter to assert such as a fact. But I do know that there is a large element rapidly increasing among the race who read and think, and who are satisfied with nothing short of the best that approves itself to their God-given reason and religious faculty."

Theological Training for Negroes

HOWARD University, Washington, D. C., was organized to provide ministers among the colored people. In the course of the years the demands for other fields of service have led to the development of various departments, until now the University has 2,000 students, of whom only a small minority are studying for Christian work. There is great need for better facilities for giving instruction to the future ministers among the colored people. The situation is distressing. "The 41,000 (approximately) Negro churches in the United States require annually an average of 1,800 new pastors. About one hundred graduated from all Negro seminaries last year, of whom less than twenty-five were college graduates. Therefore about 1,700 entered upon the pastorate with insufficient training."

The University is endeavoring through a correspondence course to aid these untrained men, and has 235 men on its roll, but it feels the need of resources to enlarge the very important work of its School of Religion. Ten thousand dollars annually is required to enlarge the faculty and $10,000 annually for extension work.

The Moravian Bi-centenary

REFERENCE was made in the March REVIEW to the plans of the Moravians in Germany to celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of the beginning of the settlement of Herrnhut by the Moravian emigrants, June 17, 1722. American Moravians, in order to emphasize the ideas of unity and brotherhood contained in the official name of the church, "Unitas Fratrum," propose that all congregations in this country participate in a uniform service of worship. Under the auspices of the Board of Religious Education, a pageant, "The Victory of Faith" has also been prepared.

A Hebrew Christian Synagogue

THE Hebrew Christian Alliance Quarterly announces the opening of the first Hebrew Christian Synagogue in the United States, February 25, 1922, by Bishop Thomas J. Garland, D.D., and assisting clergy, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. "Originally the parish house of the Church of the Advent, 517 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia, where the late Bishop Phillips Brooks was one time rector, the building has been rearranged to suit the requirements of Hebrew Christian worship and missionary service. It is no easy task to create a welcoming atmosphere to the Jewish mind unacquainted with Christian customs, and the Rev. John L. Zacker is to be congratulated on the oriental taste that suggested the decoration of the main auditorium, which was filled to overflowing by sympathetic friends of Israel and a number of Hebrew Christians."

D. M. Stearns' Mission Funds

WHILE the earthly service of Dr. D. M. Stearns, of Germantown, has ceased, there is a continuance of the world wide work started through the church and Bible classes to which he ministered. Last year, the secretary reports $79,267.34 were received and distributed through home and foreign missionaries. These contributions included:

Arabia, Palestine and the Jews....	$8,617
Turkey, Persia, and Syria	2,196
Japan and Korea	5,870
Pacific Islands	797
China	12,960
India	6,793
Africa	14,673
Latin America	12,332
North America	10,241
Europe	4,305

This work is carried on for the most part under independent evangelical and evangelistic missions. A few of the workers are not such as inspire confidence in their ability to administer funds wisely but most of them are able and consecrated workers. Some are under well established missionary Boards and Societies.

Our Indian Citizens

SOME interesting statistics about the educational needs of American Indians have been compiled by President Weeks, of Bacone College, a Baptist school for Indians in Oklahoma. The present Indian population of the United States, according to the last official report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is 336,337. Of this number 119,255 live in Oklahoma, which has the largest Indian population of any state in the Union. Arizona has 42,400 Indians, New Mexico 21,530, Kansas 1,466, and Arkansas 460. Bacone College is within access of 185,111 Indians of the southwest. Public attention must turn to the need of better school facilities for the original Americans. Both national and state officials are realizing what a tremendous burden the State must carry if the Indian youth grow up in illiteracy. According to the recent census there are among the Indians 47,318 Protestants and 58,858 Roman Catholics. English is spoken by 133,193 Indians, 91,331 read and write the English language, and 83,452 are citizens of the United States. It is estimated that one-fourth of the Indian school of school age do not attend school.

Neglected Indians in Nevada

WITHIN ten miles of Gardnerville, Nevada, there are a thousand Indians, none of whom, with the exception of those attending the Carson Indian school, have had any religious advantages until J. Winfield Scott, missionary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, began holding meetings there in February, 1921. Near Gardnerville about four hundred Indians are employed by white men on ranches at from $1 to $1.50 per day. It is not uncommon for a white ranchman to say to Indians living on his place: "You are living on my ranch and don't pay rent. You had better stay, but I can only pay you $1 a day instead of $1.50." This low wage scale has made it very hard for the Washoe to exist.

LATIN AMERICA

The Challenge of Haiti

AT a time when the relations of our government with Haiti are being so much discussed, there is a special challenge to the Christians of America to bring the Gospel to the people of this island, the population of which, while containing a variety of elements, is 97 per cent pure Negro, largely illiterate. Rev. George R. Hovey, D.D., Secretary of Education of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, who has just made a personal investigation of conditions there, writes in Missions:

"The American occupation has also failed to accomplish the constructive results which it accomplished in Cuba and the Philippines. We have done nothing for the schools; very little if anything for the finances; nothing for the industrial or agricultural life of the country. Because of this disregard for native rights and feelings, and because of the failure to carry out needed improvements, the feeling of the Haitians is very bitter toward the Americans. The Negroes in the United States have made the cause of Haiti their own and the people of South America, Japan, and all the world who are critical of America are condemning us most unsparingly for our treatment of the Black Republic. Whether our Government can redeem its good name is uncertain. There is no doubt, however, that the Christian people of America have a great obligation and opportunity to serve this backward island."

Results in Santo Domingo

THE interdenominational organization, known as the Board for Christian Work in Santo Domingo has been at work less than a year, but it has met with most encouraging results. The hospital and dispensary are well located for the present in a rented building, across the street from the building used for religious purposes, which was formerly used as a private hospital. Miss Fribley, one of the nurses who is assisting Dr. Taylor, wrote recently to Mr. S. G. Inman: "The Dominican people need help and need it badly, and I am sure if our people at home could spend a few hours in this city and visit our hospital and attend our clinic and see how eager these people are to receive help; also the appreciation of those who have been helped, they would feel that their money had been well spent." Mr. S. G. Ziegler, who has recently visited the work reports: "The native Porto Ricans who are serving in Santo Domingo, I consider above the average. It looked as though the Porto Rican church had given of her very choicest young men and women for this great cause."

Priest Advertises Protestant Work

A COLPORTEUR in Mexico had a curious experience recently in finding that his work was helped by the hostility of the village priest. He tells the story as follows: "Having gone to sell Bibles and portions in some of the near-by towns of the state of Vera Cruz I found that the Roman Catholic priest of one of these towns had preached a special sermon to his faithful in which he informed them that a Protestant book seller was about town selling very bad books, which, as soon as they came into their hands, they were to throw into the fire. But the curious part of the affair was that as soon as the rumor spread about town the attention of the inhabitants was called to my work and several who had heard the sermon hunted me up, and wanted to know about the 'bad books.' I told them that they might see for themselves and judge whether or not the books were bad. As a result people came for the books in such numbers that I sold all I had right there. I had intended to go on to several other towns but had no more books to sell, so had to postpone the rest of the trip until I could get more."

EUROPE

Roman Politics in Latvia

THE Republic of Latvia, with Riga as its capital, which was constituted by the Treaty of Versailles has a population of about two million. One-fourth of the population is Romish, and one-sixth are Greek Catholics.

The rest are Protestants, ninety-eight per cent of whom are Lutherans. In Riga the Romish adherents number 15,000 out of a population of 185,000. The Church of Rome has arranged to create an archbishopric of Riga, and in a treaty bearing the signatures of Cardinal Gasparri and the representatives of the republic, this government agrees to create and to maintain the machinery of the Roman church out of the public treasury. This treaty provides for a cathedral chosen by the government and approved by the archbishop. The edifice chosen is St. James, the oldest and largest Lutheran church in Riga, which was erected in the 13th century and stands in the great public square of the city.

Liberty for Rumanian Baptists

AS a result of oppressive government regulations directed against them, Baptists in Rumania have found their religious liberty greatly restricted. When Dr. Rushbrooke, American Baptist Commissioner for Europe, visited Rumania during the winter after a change of government had just taken place, he appealed to Mr. Jonescu, the new Prime Minister, and to Mr. Dumitreseu, Minister of Public Worship, to use their authority to have these ordinances repealed. After leaving Rumania he followed up these appeals, and in consequence, though Mr. Jonescu's government lasted scarcely a month, he found time to attend to this. Almost the last official act of his Minister of Public Worship was to annul in one direct straightforward sentence of an ordinance dated January 17th all the provisions of the document which had made so much trouble. This is the first decisive step toward the religious freedom which Rumanian Baptists so earnestly desire.

"Christocrats" in Austria

THE Austrian Student Movement, known as the Christocratic Student Union, is in close touch with the World's Student Christian Federation, though not yet affiliated with it. In a pamphlet which is widely circulated among Austrian students, the organization says of itself:

"What are the aims of the Christocrats, and why do they use this title? Because we put Christ in the very center of our present life and desire that His Spirit should penetrate our whole being. . . . To be Christian means not the mere belonging to a church, but the inner experience, and the outward practice of the Gospel of God's Kingdom, which Jesus announced. Only such people have the right to call themselves Christians. We ask for no other qualifications. We have among us members of the various religious communities and churches. It is not our task to combat any of the forms of historic Christianity, nor do we exclude any from our community. Membership does not consist in outward rites and duties, but in inner unity and sense of responsibility. Only the individual can know whether he is a man in whom the Spirit of Christ rules. Therefore we have no definite formal membership."

Soviet Officer and Missionaries

A RUSSIAN Baptist missionary, Mr. Samoukin, who has gone from Poland into Soviet Russia, met Soviet guards, just over the border, who arrested him, but said, after examining his papers, "We are setting you free because we have never found better people in the world. We are very much interested and have asked several of your preachers to come and preach the Gospel to us; and at one time we drove one of your preachers for twenty-five miles and he preached to us a good sermon." The officer in command then continued, "We are giving you full liberty and are even defending you. We love and respect you and believe in you even more than in our own communists, knowing that there are no people in the world like the evangelical believers."

Mr. Samoukin then guided the conversation to the subject of the Bible. The officer asked many questions on the Book of Revelation, and at the end of the interview wrote a pass for the missionary to proceed to Hmelovka. When he expressed his intention to return to Poland one of the "comrades" said: "Why should you go back to Poland when there is so great need of people like you right here? If you desire, we can give you the largest hall or church in the city for your meetings; but if you wish to travel from city to city, you can get a permit for traveling all over Russia."

Friends Work in Russia

THE devoted and efficient work of the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers) has become widely known. The latest report letter of the organization states:

"There are still hundreds of thousands to be fed, and the food cannot be gotten to them before next harvest. Relief should have been extended to about 20,000,000 and the very best that all of the organizations can do will not reach more than nine or ten million. This larger number will probably not be fed except for a period of two months at the very most. Up to the first of July we can increase the number of people fed according to the amount of money received."

Miss Anna J. Haines, one of the Committee's representatives, gives a concrete picture of what famine means: "The garbage-carts stopped before all of the children's institutions in Samara and the other cities in the Volga region and the baby bodies were loaded in. Children's homes, which are emptied of dead babies only to be refilled by the constant flow of abandoned children from the country; men and women and young children falling dead on the street from hunger; farm machinery, lying scrapped by the roadside and rusting to pieces, tell the story of the extent and horror of the famine."

MOSLEM LANDS

Restoration of Turkish Empire

THE conference in Paris of the allied foreign ministers for settlement of near eastern problems resulted in an agreement on the re-establishment of the Turkish empire in a modified form. Under the agreement the sultan again extends his rule over Thrace, including Rodosto, but Greece retains Adrianople and a corridor through to the Black Sea, cutting off the Turks from connection with the Bulgarians. Turkish authority is reestablished in all the northern part of Asia Minor, except that Cilicia may be made an Armenian state. Constantinople may be returned to the sovereignty of the sultan, but Gallipoli may be turned over to the Greeks, and all the forts on the straits shall be razed and future fortifications prohibited. The agreement is subject to approval by the Greeks and the Turks at a subsequent conference. The agreement is a distinct victory for the Moslems who have been agitating against destruction of the realm of the caliph with an energy which has disturbed the various possessions of the world powers from the straits of Gibraltar to India and the islands of the Pacific.

Mail Orders by Aeroplane

THE Beirut Press of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has celebrated its one hundredth anniversary by the erection of two new steel buildings designed according to the latest system of American construction. The old presses, which printed at the rate of 600 sheets an hour are being replaced by the modern Kelly automatic feed, 3,600 an hour. The new Arabic linotype replaces sixteen hand type-setters. It seems thoroughly in keeping with this modern equipment that on the day of the anniversary exercises there was delivered by aeroplane the largest order for Christian literature which has ever come from Mesopotamia. The air mail from Busrah to Beirut took two days, whereas by regular post via India, the Red Sea, and Egypt, the exchange of letters takes approximately three months. The next item of modern equipment for which the Beirut Press is wishing is an aeroplane for colportage work!

Resuming Work in Aintab

CENTRAL Turkey College, which began its devoted service at Aintab, in the interior of Turkey forty-five years ago, is resuming its educational and medical work, long interrupted by the war. It greatly needs financial assistance in meeting the difficult problems which confront it.

The hospital, dispensary, preparatory department and two aided schools outside Aintab are now in operation. The opening of the Freshman class, industries for self-help, and the college press in 1922-23 is greatly desired, but the buildings damaged during the siege must be repaired before they can be occupied, and it is estimated that these repairs will cost $10,000. In 1914-15 the college staff numbered 23, five outside schools were aided, and over 20,000 prescriptions were filled annually at the dispensary. The hospital has 80 beds.

Letters from Aleppo state that conditions in Aintab are "very uncomfortable" and report nobody "returning at present or likely to go, as things are," while they think that more will emigrate when warm weather comes! Meantime, the workers in Aintab are "carrying on" in faith and right loyally.

Teachers for Afghanistan

HOW far modern educational ideas have penetrated into that stronghold of Islam, Afghanistan, may be judged from the following advertisements which appeared in a newspaper in Fategarh, India:

Wanted—Trained and untrained Graduates, Undergraduates, and Matriculates for the Education Department of His Imperial Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan.

Wanted—Lady Doctors and Lady Teachers, preferably graduates of some Indian University. Lady teachers expected to know cutting, sewing, knitting, cookery and laundry. If married, husband will be provided with vocational work. Apply with testimonials to the undersigned, stating nationality, age, salary required, and if married husband's qualifications and his terms of employment should also be stated.

Wanted—Civil Engineers for educational and outdoor work in Afghanistan: Graduates of Indian and foreign universities can apply. Applicants must state terms of employment, age, nationality and salary required.

INDIA

German Missionaries

THE British Government has now laid down the conditions under which German missionaries may return to work in India. Societies that were excluded during the war are not yet permitted to resume work, but if the work in any area is suffering because of a lack of missionaries, individual missionaries may be permitted to return. Among the conditions is one that the official head in India of the mission in which it is desired to introduce any such individual must be a British subject. It is also stated that "it is understood that only a limited number of applications will be made, that they will be confined to cases of genuine necessity from the point of view of the mission, and will normally be made on behalf of missionaries who have previously worked in India and that the India Office will transmit each application to the Government of India which will consider each case on its merits having special regard to the previous record of the applicant."

Race Question in the Indian Church

ONE reaction of the Nationalist movement in India is seen in the demands made on the missionaries by the native Christians. Dr. H. C. Velte, of the American Presbyterian Mission in the Panjab, writes:

"We are passing through a great crisis. The transference of authority to Indians is going on rapidly, far more rapidly than any one dreamed of two years ago. The ferment produced by the present national and racial outburst of feeling has found its way into the Church and the situation causes a good deal of misgiving. The demands made by the educated portion of the Christian community—educated by the mission—are becoming more and more insistent. Natives must be treated in all respects exactly like the foreign missionary. The cost of living has gone up by leaps and bounds during the last two years. The poorer classes are the greatest sufferers. The racial question is the chief disturbing element. It will have to be handled with great wisdom, patience and sympathy. We need the prayers and confidence of the Church in America in these difficult days."

CHINA

Activities of Chinese Christians

CHRISTIANS of various denominations in Nanking, China, have been promoting a Bible reading movement in all the congregations of the city. A stewardship committee under the leadership of an energetic Chinese pastor is making clear the duty of Christian Chinese. A personal work committee is striving to increase this year by one-third the membership of the 2,400 native Christians in Nanking. The coordinating and standardizing of the Sunday-schools is being promoted, while two Chinese workers each give an afternoon a week to the prisons.

It is hoped to build soon a large institutional plant which will help to bring the message of salvation to the many thousands in one part of the city. This south city center, as it is to be called, is located where in the old days the 30,000 examination stalls were to be found.

Church Council of Nanking

A REMARKABLE union of half a dozen missionary forces—the Nanking Church Council—with Dr. P. F. Price of the Nanking School of Theology as executive secretary, has been in operation for a little over a year. Rev. S. J. Mills says of it in the Continent: "Wherever it has been possible, the Church Council acts as a clearing house for the missions in their evangelistic work and has made unnecessary the duplication of machinery on the part of each mission when city-wide movements have been promoted. With 'Nanking for Christ' as its motto many new phases of work have been initiated and pushed by the Chinese and American members of the Council's numerous committees. . . . The Council's committee prepared subjects for simultaneous use in all the city churches during the special campaign during Chinese New Year. A big forward movement has also been undertaken this year. In a mat-shed that will accommodate 1,000 people, erected in the busiest and most populous section of the city, special services are to be held each afternoon. On Good Friday of last year a union gathering was held in the Central Methodist church, when 1,000 Christian Chinese were present, and during the Washington Conference a union prayer meeting was held in the same building."

China's Education Problem

IN China there are now 134,000 modern schools, including normal, industrial, and technical schools, colleges, and universities, with 4,500,000 students, 326,000 teachers, and an annual expenditure of $40,000,000. Relatively education for girls is weak;

there are thirty-three schools for boys to one for girls; twenty-two men students to one girl, and six times as much spent for boys as for girls. Outside a Girls' Higher Normal School in Peking, no institution for girls above the middle school is carried on by the Government. Actual achievements in public education do not come up to the regulations published in 1913. The lower primary course is meant to be compulsory, but in large cities educational deficiency is still lamentably apparent, while in the rural districts we may not find a single school for an area of tens of miles. In the United States the expenditure on education per capita for the population is $5.62. In China it is seven and a half cents. One million elementary schools are required for 89,000,000 pupils, i. e., eight times the present number. This would necessitate 2,000,000 teachers for primary schools alone.—The Chinese Recorder.

Japanese Christians in China

THERE are enlarging opportunities and increasing need for Christian work among the Japanese merchants, thousands of whom are making their homes in China. Some ten years ago a group of Japanese Christians residing in Hankow organized themselves, and asked to be taken in under the wing of the American Church Mission. Bishop Roots agreed, of course, and a substantial brick church, with a residence for a Japanese worker, was built on part of the mission property. Two years ago a great step in advance was made when Bishop Tucker, of Kyoto, in response to an urgent request from Bishop Roots, released an experienced Japanese clergyman, the Rev. P. N. Uchida, to shepherd and convert his fellow-countrymen in China. He took over full charge of the Japanese work in Hankow, in place of the American missionary who had been trying to carry on Sunday services through an interpreter. —The Living Church.

A Prison Convert

IN Chefoo, a company of business men have formed a local Chinese independent church. Due to the efforts of these men there has been a most unique conversion in the new model prison. The convert was at one time chief of police, a highly educated gentleman, but for conniving at an attempt to smuggle contraband opium, he was sentenced to six years' imprisonment. He became interested in the Gospel and signified his desire to be baptized. Two elders of the independent church went to the prison and in the presence of the keeper and 400 fellow-prisoners he was baptized. Since then, like Joseph, he has found great favor with the keeper of the prison, and wears an armlet bearing the characters "a good man." He is sent from cell to cell to settle all troubles and is regarded as a kind and just mediator by all.

JAPAN-CHOSEN

Public Recognition of Christianity

THE Hon. D. Tagawa, a member of the Japanese delegation at the recent Washington Conference, a member of the Imperial Diet, and a Presbyterian elder, publicly declared: "If we are to make a free Japan, we are to make a Christian Japan." Governors and mayors often accept invitations to address annual meetings of religious bodies. At the coronation of the present Emperor several Christians were included in the list of Japanese who received honors, some of them, like the Rev. Dr. Motoda, Headmaster of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, and Miss Ume Tsuda, principal of a school for girls, being so prominent as Christian workers that their selection implied an approval of their work. Never before had Christians been so honored by the throne.

The influence of Christianity is far greater than official reports can indicate. In most countries Christianity made its first converts among the lower strata of society; but in Japan it has won its greatest successes among the Samurai, or knightly class, which has furnished the majority of the army and navy officers, journalists, legislators, educators, and leading men generally of the new Japan. While approximately one person in every thousand of the population is a Christian, one in every hundred of the educated classes is a Christian.

Preaching to Railway Employees

AN American Presbyterian missionary, the Rev. Dr. George P. Pierson, writes: "I have to report the placing of forty-one railway stations at our disposal for addresses, the official assembling of audiences, and a free pass on the line when engaged in this particular work. The Railway Department of the Government has for a long time felt the need of moral instruction for its employees. Buddhist and Shinto priests have had the privilege of holding meetings at the stations, and latterly Christian speakers have not only been allowed but even invited. When I wish to speak at a station or two, I ask our local station-master the day before to make arrangements. He telephones down the line, fixes the hour, and next day stands ready to furnish me with a pass. When I reach the station, I find the main waiting-room arranged like a chapel, with table, glass of water, and sometimes a vase of flowers. The seats are occupied by the station-master, his assistants, the ticket man, the telegraph men, the baggage men, and in almost every case by some of the women and children from the stores near by. The station master asks me into his office, gives tea, and sometimes offers lunch. I can leave a package of books in the men's room, and send them papers regularly thereafter."

Appointing a Missionary

THE Korean General Assembly has a unique way of selecting the men who are to go out as foreign missionaries. At the last General Assembly a man was needed as a reinforcement for its mission in Shantung, China. The man was nominated on the floor of the General Assembly, and without previous notice, called upon to go. He expressed willingness to do so, and though he is the pastor of a large church in Andong, he is now making preparations to go to China.

AFRICA

Wife-Beating in Egypt

THE Church Missionary Outlook states that wife-beating, having the sanction of the Koran, is common in Egypt, and women are often treated worse than animals. A man who was striking a woman across the face with a whip replied to the one who rebuked him by saying: "O, she is only my sister." The writer says: "I have never seen a woman retaliate. They put up with gross indignities and cruelty at the hands of their husbands, as if this were the most natural treatment in the world. And people pass by, taking no notice; perhaps even laughing at the man's anger, but showing no pity for the silent sufferer."

Candidates for Church Membership

IN a recent letter, quoted in the Church Missionary Outlook, Bishop Melville Jones describes a visit to the Ilesha district, in the Yoruba country, West Africa, where more than 400 candidates were presented for confirmation, and this in spite of the fact that he confirmed a large number there the previous year. Of the 400, less than ten had been baptized in infancy—a proof of the recent and rapid growth of the Church.

"One man, an 'elder' of an outlying church, stumbled so much over his reading that we were for making him wait till next year. He was much distressed. That night he walked twelve miles to his home, and returned, accompanied by his wife, covering the same distance in the early hours of the morning. She came to explain that it was his eyesight which was at fault, and sure enough, on our producing a Bible with larger type, he read the passage selected quite well. He promised to buy a larger Bible, and great was the joy of the couple when he was allowed to take his place with the accepted candidates."

Chiefs at Church Convocation

AN unprecedented feature of the recent General Convocation of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary District of Liberia was the presence of a delegation of twenty native chiefs of the Vai tribe. Clad in the picturesque toga and turban, and holding the silver-studded staff symbolic of a chief's office, each represented the direct appeal of Africa for Christian evangelization. They stated through an interpreter that the object of their coming was to present two cows and a large quantity of rice and cash in appreciation of the efforts the Church was putting forth to educate their children. In the election of Bishop Gardiner, one of their own kin, as Suffragan of the District, they felt that their tribe had been greatly honored. They themselves were eager to give their earnest support to further the efforts of the Church among their own people. The special significance of this occurrence lies in the fact that these chiefs are all nominal Mohammedans, yet they recognize in Christian missionary work the hope of advancement for their people.

Lost Opportunity

THE increasing power of Islam is the most formidable enemy that missionaries in Africa are facing today. Mr. George Schwab, of the Presbyterian Mission in West Africa, writes of a fresh instance of this—one which he says might have been prevented if the Christians had accepted their opportunity last year. He says: "A chief among the Limandi people has gone to the Bafia country and brought back a mallim (Mohammedan Hausa instructor) to his country. That brings this menace a whole day's journey nearer our front yard and is on the border of the Basa country. Had the mission sent a man last year to this region, I am certain that we would not now have had this happen."

Moslems in South Africa

WITH the object of taking the Moslem faith to both Europeans and natives, the South African Islamic Mission has now been organized, according to a letter from Mr. Tomlinson, of the South Africa General mission, published in the South African Pioneer. A German named Gulam Hussein is organizing secretary and convener of meetings. He has lately returned from India where he has been visiting the large centers. He has met with remarkable success and a great deal of sympathy during his visits to the largest towns in South Africa. Durban is to be the headquarters of this mission. They hope to get a European who has become a Mohammedan out from England to work among the Europeans, and a native from Egypt to work amongst the natives. In the meantime a wealthy Moslem merchant at Bulwer, Natal, has donated a large farm to the mission. It is reported that there are thirty European Moslem converts in South Africa, two of whom are in Durban.

ISLANDS OF THE SEA

Moslem Unrest in the Island World

LORD NORTHCLIFFE, who has just returned to England after a tour of the world, reports conditions of unrest also in the Moslem island world. In the Fiji islands he found agents of Gandhi stirring up the Moslems and uniting them with the vast movement and vague aims generated in the heart of India. The fact that Gandhi is a Hindu does not seem to affect his status among Moslems. Newspapers for Moslems are springing up "like mosquitoes," everywhere.

The United States does not appear to have much politically to fear from this Moslem movement. Northcliffe said that the Moslem Moros, who constitute a large part of the population of our Philippines, are bitterly opposed to the independence of the Philippines. They say they are bossed by officious Filipino officials too much as it is, and greatly distrust and despise the Filipinos.

Ku Kim's Conversion

KU KIM cared more for gambling and opium smoking, than about God and his soul. To get rich quickly, he decided to go to Honolulu. Not having much money, he had to travel as deck-passenger on a sailing-vessel. The captain caught him smoking opium and flung his pipe and opium into the sea. The seven weeks' trip cured him of his vice. In Honolulu he secured a place as waiter in a restaurant. But a fire broke out and Ku Kim was arrested and sentenced to two years' imprisonment for incendiarism.

In his cell he found a Chinese Bible and to while away his time, began to read it. His heart began to believe; but his mind waited for proof. He began to pray to Jesus and made a vow to become His disciple, if Jesus would set him free. The next day he was discharged, much to his amazement. The real fire-bug had been discovered.

Ku Kim kept his vow and became a Christian. Through diligence and thrift he acquired considerable means. He finally became a deacon in the church in Honolulu and last of all, Chinese consul.

The Gospel in Nias

TANGIBLE proofs of progress in the island of Nias are found in the following examples:

One day an elder came to me and said: "Tuan, send me out to preach God's word. You need not pay me any salary because we have a potato field and that will be sufficient to keep us this year."

Here is another: One day I examined the work that my carpenters had done. When I doubted their word, they pointed to one of their companions, a young Christian, and said, "Tuan, ask him. He won't tell a lie."

A man came one day with his wife, and said, "Tuan, God has blessed us in every way. He has made us well and kept us so, but we have nothing to give him for a sacrifice except these three guldens, but we would like to make a sacrifice so we have considered what we might give up and we have decided to give a cocoanut grove. I did not want to sell it because it is fertile land, but now we are glad to give it to the Lord."

There is a Christian mass movement all over the North. There may be much heathenism left, but the population as a whole has been turning to Christ. Gifts are always an evidence that Christianity has become dear to one's heart. Our Mission Society, which is known as the Kongsu-Nias, has raised over 2,000 guldens in one year. If this society should spread all over Nias, our entire field would become self-sustaining. MISSIONARY SCHLIPKOETER.

Faith Healing among the Maoris

INTERPRETING Christianity to suit his own ideas and what he believes to be for the best interests of his people, Wiremu Ratana, a Maori faith-healer, is reported by the Literary Digest to be doing an influential work among the aborigines of New Zealand and to be effecting cures which have the appearance of the miraculous. Discarded implements of the halt and maimed are said to testify to the reality of his cures, and his name has become a household word even among the white people.

His cures have attracted wide interest and his methods have been much discussed at recent meetings of the Wellington Synod. Two missionaries who visited Ratana to inquire into his belief and teaching reported:

"As the result of our experience in interviewing him, listening to his addresses, and watching his dealings with individual cases, we felt perfectly confident that there was nothing of the ordinary Maori *tohunga*ism about the matter, and that Ratana was sound in all the fundamentals of Christian truth. We believe that he has been called of God to bring back the Maori people from lapsing into *tohunga*ism and pagan practices, which, unfortunately, had become only too common among them."

"Ratana regards it as his chief mission to eradicate from the minds of his people that superstition—the sinister growth of ignorance and tradition—named *tohunga*ism, or witchcraft, which in spite of schools and education continues to hold down the Maori people. He challenges the tohungas or witch doctors to show miracles such as he believes God performs through him. No tohunga has come forward, and the prestige of Ratana continues to increase. His 'Book of Cures' now contains the signatures of more than nineteen thousand Maoris, testifying to the efficacy of the healing."

OBITUARY

Pundita Ramabai

A CABLEGRAM from India April 5th announced the death of Pundita Ramabai, the world famous rescuer and Christian educator of child widows in India. It was only a few months ago that her beloved daughter and fellow worker, Mano-Ramabai, was called home.

Ramabai was the daughter of a Brahmin priest and so well educated that before she was twenty she received from the Pundits of Calcutta the title of Sarasvati, never before conferred upon a woman. She became convinced by her study of the Hindu sacred writings that the degradation to which widows were subjected was not a tenet of the Hindu religion, but an abuse of its teachings. Ramabai, herself a widow, determined to devote her life to bettering the condition of the sad class of her sisters. To this end she went to England in 1883 where she mastered English, giving lectures in Sanscrit at Cheltenham College in return for English lessons. There she became a Christian and for over thirty years has conducted her work as a Christian enterprise.

In 1883 she visited the United States and upon her return to India opened in Bombay a girl's home school which was called "Sharada Sadan," (Home of Wisdom). This school increased rapidly during the great famine in 1896 and was moved to a farm near Poona. In later years the enterprise so developed that schools and orphanages for 1,500 or 1,700 young women and children have been carried on with the greatest success. She trained her own teachers for the industrial departments of weaving, printing and farm work. In addition to all her activities in superintending and financing she translated the Bible and many other Christian books.

Dr. John Giffen of Cairo

A CABLEGRAM announces the death of Dr. John Giffen of Egypt on April 5th, from broncho-pneumonia. Dr. Giffen was born in Belmont County, Ohio, August 1st, 1846. He was graduated from Westminster College in June, 1871, and from Xenia Theological Seminary in 1874, was appointed a missionary to Egypt in 1874 and sailed on the 10th of February, 1875. Soon after reaching the field he married Miss Mary E. Galloway, missionary to Egypt under the Associate Reformed Church who died October 16th, 1881. In 1884, he married Miss Elizabeth E. Newlin of Cadiz, Ohio, who had entered the field in Egypt in 1880 as a missionary of the United Presbyterian Church. Dr. Giffen was stationed at Alexandria from 1875 to 1877, at Assiut from 1877 to 1888, at Cairo from September, 1889 until his death. He was one of the most experienced missionaries of the United Presbyterian Church and his wise councils and earnest spirit will be sorely missed.

SOME BEST BOOKS ON THE AMERICAN NEGRO

SELECTED BY MONROE N. WORK

Director, Department of Records and Research, Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

Some time ago President Charles W. Eliot made his famous suggestion relative to securing a liberal education from a five foot shelf of books. Although there has been much controversy concerning the validity of his suggestion, I am venturing in a somewhat similar manner to name a list of books the reading of which in my opinion will give one a broad view of the whole subject of the Negro in America. This does not mean that these are the only books which would give such valuable information. Other selections could be made which would no doubt give as comprehensive information as the following list, the purpose of which is to enable the reader to get a broad and impartial view of the Negro in the United States. These books will give the student comprehensive and accurate information relative to the present conditions and status of the Negro, his progress, the problems which confront him and the shades and schools of opinion that deal with him, both within and without the race.

The books in the selection which I have made are grouped under six heads. The first head is, "The African Background." It is necessary in order to understand the Negro in the United States that one should have some knowledge of the conditions of the Negro in Africa. As a further background to the information about the present situation as it relates to the Negro, one should have a knowledge of the Negro in slavery. Therefore the second division of the selection deals with books on "Slavery and Its Results." The third division consists of books on "The Negro During the Civil War and Reconstruction" (1860 to about 1890). In many respects this is one of the most important periods in the history of the Negro in the United States. It was during this period that they were emancipated and the South was called upon to readjust itself politically and economically on a basis of all of its population being free. The Negroes were made full citizens and given the opportunities of free men. Out of this sudden change from slavery to freedom many of the problems which at present confront the Negro and the nation arose.

The fourth division includes books on, "Present Conditions" (1890 to 1922), and present discussions of the race problem, the status and progress of the Negro and information relative to race relations, especially inter-racial cooperation. The fifth division containing books on racial capacity, presents a list of references dealing with the mental capacity of the Negro as compared with the mental capacity of other races. The sixth and last division on, "The Literature of the Negro" gives a list of books written by Negroes grouped as follows: (a) "Expressive," that is, books of poetry; (b) "Biographical," and (c) "Interpretative," that is, those books wherein Negroes have undertaken to give an interpretation of the race problem from their own standpoint.

TEN BOOKS ON THE NEGRO IN AMERICA

- SELECTED BY REV. RODNEY W. ROUNDY
 BRAWLEY'S, "A Social History of the Negro Church."
 DU BOIS, W. E. B., "The Souls of Black Folks."
 DUNBAR, PAUL LAURENCE, "Lyrics of Lowly Life."
 HAMMOND, L. H., "In the Vanguard of a Race."
 HAYNES, "The Trend of the Races."
 PEABODY'S, "Education for Life."
 WASHINGTON, BOOKER T., "Up from Slavery."
 WORDSON, C. G., "The History of the Negro Church."
 WORK, JOHN WESLEY, "Folk Songs of the American Negro."
 WORK, MONROE N., "The Negro Year Book for 1921-22."

The Negro Year Book for 1921-1922. Sixth annual edition enlarged and improved. Edited by Monroe N. Work. 75 cents and $1.25. Negro Year Book Company. Tuskegee Institute. Tuskegee, Alabama.

The information in previous editions of this excellent Year Book has been revised and brought down to date and 250 pages have been added. One hundred and fifty pages are devoted to a review of the events of 1919-1921 as they affected the interests and showed the progress of the race. Among the topics treated somewhat at length are: "Inter-Racial Cooperation", "The Progress of the Negro", "Health Improvement", "Improvement in Education", "Inventions by Negroes", "Scholarship Distinctions Which Negroes Have Gained", "The Negro and Labor", "The Negro in Politics", "President Harding's Speech", "Social Equality", "Intermarriage", "Racial Consciousness", "Jim-Crow Cars", "Peonage", "Lynchings", "Ku Klux Klan", "Riots". It is a very valuable book of information, with statistics, historical facts, biographical data, records and references to literature.

Two Arabian Knights. By M. E. Hume Griffith. Illustrated. 12mo. 166 pp. 2s. 6d. Church Missionary Society. London, 1921.

Daoud and Najib are two Arab boys whose adventures will thrill any wide-awake boy or girl. The stories describe the surroundings of such boys, their homes, work and play; their contact with the foreign missionary; various plots and trials; the secret of courage and victory. An outlet is needed for the sympathy awakened in the hearts of young readers by these stories.

Turkey, A World Problem of Today. By Talcott Williams. Map. Pp. viii, 336. Garden City, N. Y., and Toronto, Doubleday, Page & Co., 1921.

A man born in Turkey and spending his first sixteen years there, one who from 1876 has been writing and more lately speaking on Turkey—newspaper, magazine, encyclopedia, hundreds of articles—and so expert in presenting literary material to the public that he was called to be director of the Columbia School of Journalism, needs no further credentials for the reading public. This volume is an amplification and personalization of lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston in 1920—"the most important courses delivered in this country," the author believes. The average reader will no doubt think the book altogether too weighty and well-reasoned to merit a wide reading by those who are not specialists or scholars.

Dr. Williams argues convincingly for the acceptance by the United States of a mandatory from the League of Nations for Asiatic Turkey and Constantinople, or as much of it as can be saved from other Powers. Had the argument been presented in condensed form to our Washington legislators, it is difficult to see how it could fail to result in precisely the issue for which he pleads, if sound argument and the teachings of history determine Washington votes. But the American Government failed to seize the opportunity.

The closing chapter on the present situation—in June of 1921 before it had reached its worst—introduces a labyrinth of possible solutions of Turkey's unhappy plight. Dr. Williams's minatory finger expresses his own conviction: "Duty can be evaded by man or nation; but the penalty of evading a duty neither man nor nation can avoid. The American people has refused now; but, be assured, it will pay an inevitable penalty, sharing in the horrors and destruction of a war greater than the Great War. . . . What the United States was asked to do was not wrecking, and plundering the wreck into the bargain, but salvage; it is not charity; it is insurance. . . . What the final disposition of Asia Minor will be, no one can predict; but any arrangement which forgets that the fighting race which inhabits it has in the end swayed the region and lands about, forgets the lessons of history for centuries."

A Gentleman in Prison. Translated by Caroline Macdonald. 12mo. 164 pp. $1.75 net. George H. Doran Co. 1922.

The glory of the Gospel of Christ is that it transforms men from the inside by introducing the life of God. Here is a remarkable, but not unusual record, told by the man himself and translated and vouched for by Miss Macdonald. Tokichi Ishii was a criminal in a Japanese prison. He came into contact with Christ—the effect was so great that the Japanese Governor of the prison himself testified to the man's subsequent triumphant life and death. Mr. Ishii first makes his confessions and then gives many illuminating impressions of Christ, the Bible and the Christian life. Dr. John Kelman, in his introduction, says that the record has something of the glamor of "Arabian Knights" and of Poe's "Tales of Mystery." Better still and more truly it partakes of the faith inspiring character of the Acts and the Epistles. Read it and pass on the story of Tokichi Ishii to young and old everywhere.

Men and Methods that Win in Foreign Fields. By J. R. Saunders, Th.D. 12mo. 121 pp. $1.00. Fleming H. Revell Co., 1921.

Experience is valuable in testing theories as Dr. Saunders proves by these conclusions reached by his experiences in the Graves Theological Seminary at Canton in his efforts to make Christians of the Chinese. He recognizes and discusses the need of men, of strong men, of educated men, of spiritual men and of men who can adjust themselves to new situations. There is more of theory than of concrete facts in this volume which would have been strengthened by a larger use of the facts and incidents on which the author bases his conclusions. It is, however, a helpful, though provoking study.

People of the World. By Edith A. How. 16mo. 92 pp. 2s. S. P. C. K. London. 1921

This little volume for little people is very attractively illustrated in color. Part one tells interesting facts about Egypt, the Sahara, Uganda, the Congo, South Africa; and part two describes people of Europe, Italy, India, China, the South Seas and Arctic regions. Much information is packed into small compass, making the book of special value to parents and teachers on young children.

In practically all pagan nations there were groups separated from the fortunate ones by impassable gulfs, dependent on race, birth, or condition. Individual worth could not avail to raise the lower stratas of society; and individual worthlessness could not rob one of his exalted privileges over less fortunate groups, if he had been born into the dominant caste.

But listen, as the Christian fathers define the society which Jesus founded: As to race, status and sex, hear the apostle Peter—"There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus"; because, to quote the Apostle Paul, "God. . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." As to the doctrine of the perpetual acceptability of some races and groups, and the eternal rejection and submergence of others, hear Peter declare—"Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him." For those who compose as well as those who administer society, Christ Himself laid down a rule to be applied where questions of duty come into conflict with rules of caste, with laws of "superiors" and "inferiors"—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Doubters may turn to Matthew 22:16 and to Mark 12:14 and read the testimonies of stand to what extent legal distinctions and discriminations on grounds of race have been recognized in American law and custom, let him read Volume 43 of the "American Law Review," the articles which begin on pages 29, 205, 354, 547, 695, and 869. The perusal will be illuminating, if nothing more and will incline one to ask whether the doctrines of Christ, directed against the maintenance of caste, have made much headway against the wisdom of modern lawmakers and society.

A DILEMMA AND THE WAY OUT

It is held that the Negro is an inferior race, and therefore can not be admitted to free and full exercise of all the rights of American citizenship without endangering existing institutions. This is the major ground on which argument is usually made to justify restrictions upon the right of the Negro to hold any place to which his merits may entitle him. But science, speaking through some of her devotees, is dividing men on the question of the superiority and inferiority of races. Anthropologists differ as to the acceptance of race as a basis of inherent worth. For example, read in "The Physical Basis of Society" by Dr. Carl Kelsey, the chapter on "race differences." Here a Caucasian writer, supposed to be bound by tradition to assert the inherent superiority of white races over darker ones, after honestly examining the various theories, pauses to remark that "At all events until some one is able to put his finger upon some physical difference which can be shown to have some connection with the degree of culture or the possibility thereof, we have no right to assume that one group of human beings is either superior or inferior to any other. Indeed some of our best anthropologists tell us that if we give a fixed value to all the various parts of the body and then proceed to measure the various races we shall find one standing about as high as the rest on our ideal scale." (pp. 292-93.)

There is but one way out of this dilemma and that is the Christian way. All the other ways have been tried; and all the nations of old that have tried them are "one with Nineveh and Tyre." If the Negro takes a citizen's part—loves America; supports it in peace and defends it in war; submits himself to its ordinances; assimilates its best ideals; and venerates its institutions (and no one can deny that he is doing all these things), he is an American citizen at heart. If the organic law has removed the disabilities of a former slave from him, and has admitted him into the rights, duties and benefits of American citizenship, then he is an American citizen de jure and de facto. His place in American life, therefore, ought to be that of other fellow citizens; and the plea of race can not ethically be urged to defeat his claims to all of the protection, dignities, and opportunities of American citizenship.

Let us not forget our premise: "This is a Christian nation"; and

Negroes' Work at Home and Abroad

BY PROF. KELLY MILLER, WASHINGTON, D. C.
Dean of the Junior College, Howard University

THREE centuries ago two streams of population began to flow to the newer from the older continents of the world. The European component was but the natural overflow of the fountain of civilization, while the African confluent was forced upward from the lowest level of savagery. The confluence of these two streams has constituted our present population of some hundred million souls, divided into the approximate ratio of ten to one. Here we have the most gigantic instance in history of the hemispheric transference of population. The closest intimacy of contact of markedly dissimilar races gives the world its acutest and most interesting object lesson in race relationship. We are convinced that the whole movement must have been under the direction of a guiding hand higher than human intelligence or foresight. The incident evils that have grown out of the historic contact of these two races are but the logical outcome of a shortsighted and fatuous philosophy. The benefit to human civilization now flowing and destined to flow from this contact, illustrates the teaching of history, that an over-ruling Providence makes the wrath of man to praise Him, while holding the remainder of wrath in restraint.

Slavery was an institution of learning as well as of labor. The Negro's taskmaster was also his schoolmaster. In order that he might accomplish the crude tasks imposed upon him, it was necessary that the Negro should be instructed in the rudimentary principles and crude methods of accomplishment. Had the Negro been inapt in understanding and inept in performance, he would have been unprofitable and, therefore, undesirable as a servant.

Under the tuition of slavery the Negro also gained acquaintance with the English language with its rich store of knowledge and culture. Through slavery also the Negro was brought in touch with the Christian religion and the whole race, as if by magic, embraced this spiritual cult which appeals so powerfully to its own inner longings. This is the strongest tie that binds the Negro in the ennobling bond of spiritual kinship to the fellowship of humanity.

There is no like instance in history where a weaker race in such large numbers has been introduced into the midst of the stronger race and has entered into the inheritance of civilization. Inheritance is the reward of meekness. The galaxy of the Christian graces, loving kindness, humility and forgiveness of spirit are exemplified in the Negro character. And verily he has his reward.

The progress of the Negro race in the United States is uni-
