

● On April 4, 1968,
one civil rights leader died.
And a new one was born.

When an assassin's bullet ended Martin Luther King, Jr.'s fight against racial injustice, Coretta Scott King began a new battle. The battle to keep her husband's ideals alive amid the spreading belief that the non-violent movement had run its course.

Five years later, in an interview with the Reverend Cecil Williams of San Francisco, Coretta Scott King talks about those efforts.

And proves that the non-violent civil rights movement is far from over.

Produced by

GROUP

WESTINGHOUSE BROADCASTING COMPANY

"A Visit with Coretta Scott King"
Tonight at 8:00

WNEW-TV

5

METROMEDIA TELEVISION